POLITICAL RUMORS.

Reporters are still sending out from Ottawa and Montreal many statements regarding Mr. Laurier's cabinet. Probably the Montreal Witness was nearly right when it said on Friday that Mr. Laurier had agreed upon the men who were to form his cabinet, but that he had not assigned them their positions. There is little doubt that Mr. Laurier will take the presidency of the council, which involves no great amount of departmental work. Sir Richard Cartwright will be Minister of Finance; Mr. Davies, Minister of Railways; Mr. Geoffrion, Minister of Justice. Upon these there is little difference of opinion. How the other offices will go is in process of settlement. Some of the despatches intimate that Messrs. Fielding, Borden and Fraser will be in the cabinet from Nova Scotia, but it seems impossible that there can be three from that province while only one, Mr. Blair, is from New Brunswick. Sir Charles Tupper has, up to the present, given no signs of an intention to resign, but well-informed men on both sides believe that he does not intend to meet the House as First Minister. It is pretty generally agreed now that Parliament cannot meet on the 16th instant, and that some way will be found to further prorogue it. Among the rumors is one to the effect that the Conservatives will contest the seat of every one of Mr. Laurier's ministers, except, perhaps, that of Mr. Laurier. But there are many rumors, of course, which may not work out into acts.

THE CONSERVATIVE PARTY.

There is much speculation in the Conservative ranks in Toronto and elsewhere—that is in the different Conservative ranks—as to the influence upon the future of the party of the changes which the late election has brought about. There are many who feel that the party should pass out of the control of the old time managers, and that greater prominence should be given men like Clarke Wallace, Dalton McCarthy, John Ross Robertson, E. E. Shepperd, who are described "as the best specimens of true Conservatism in the ranks." No doubt at all, there could be a reorganization of the Conservative party without injury to itself and the country. An abandonment of the extreme ideas which that party adopted upon protection would benefit it, the adoption of a thoroughly Canadian policy instead of the jingo policy, which in talk at least places England first, would be a good change. The English Conservative party is not a protection party; why should the Canadian Conservative party? There is talk already of a Conservative convention to lay down a new line for the party. The recent elections have shown that the Conservative party is wonderfully strong in Ontario, for Mr. Laurier did not get in that province, even with the magic of Sir Oliver Mowat's name, the majority which might be expected when the stand which he took upon the school question is considered. In Manitoba, too, the Conservatives are very strong, as the election shows. Every true Canadian will regret any tendency to divide Canada politically upon purely geographical lines. It is a great thing for the future of the country that the fact will be demonstrated soon that a French Canadian can lead Canada quite as effectively as an English Canadian; but that is not a matter purely of party, for the Conservative party might also be able at some time to offer the country a French Canadian leader. However, it certainly would be a good thing for the Conservatives, at an early day, to define their political views, and to give the people generally some idea upon what lines they propose to deal with the future politics of the country.

THE PLUMBERS.

The plumbers—acting in their individual capacity—are now such a formidable body of men, and there is such great fear of them, created by the wit of sundry humorous writers in the newspapers, that the reader is apt to feel quite apprehensive when he learns that those of them whose happy lot is cast in Canada have formed an association. If half of what is said about the individual plumber be true an organization of master plumbers must be more terrible than an army with banners. Just as the country is about to have political peace, just as the coming premier is arranging his cabinet at the Windsor Hotel, Montreal, the master plumbers of the Dominion meet at the St. Lawrence Hall in the same city, and they, too, address themselves to the preparation of a platform and the making up of a form of government. Very mildly, indeed, and in a reassuring way is their platform laid down. The organization, we are told, is for —sanitary, commercial and social purposes and has for its special objects the advancement appertaining to sanitary laws; to promote and combine the interests of the trade in the latest discoveries in sanitary science; the protection of the trade against imposition, injustice or encroachments upon their common rights or interests; encouraging inventions or improvements in sanitary appliances, fostering an interchange of thought and eliciting and communicating for the benefit of each member the best talent and result of experience and ability of all, to promote amicable relations with employes on the basis of mutual interest and equitable justice to both journeymen and master plumbers; to encourage Dominion and Provincial legislation for the furtherance of sanitary laws; to secure for the members of the trade equitable treatment in their dealings with manufacturers and dealers in supplies; to regulate the system of apprenticeship and employment, so as to prevent, as far as practicable, the evils growing out of deficient training in the responsible duties of selecting, arranging and fitting up materials relating to the hydraulic and sanitary condition of dwellings, public and private institutions; to create and maintain a sanitary code at as high a standard as the progress of science (chemical, philosophical and mechanical knowledge) teaches.

All of this sounds well and is calculated to dispel some of the delusions which exist in the public mind in regard to the general nature of the plumber. Then we observe that the Mayor of Montreal spoke in approving terms of the new association; that Col. Massey, of the same city, declared that its objects were most commendable, and as our respected follow-citizen, Mr. Thomas Campbell, is a member of the executive committee, and Mr. J. H. Doody a vice-president, we may feel somewhat assured that the new organization will not, to say the least, do any harm.

The Democratic National Convention will assemble at Chicago on Tuesday to select a candidate for the presidency. There appears to be an agreement in the public mind the present year that the Republicans will carry the country; but the Democrats by no means admit this. The silver question has forced its way to the front, and there seems to be a pretty general conclusion that the convention will nominate a free silver candidate. But this is by no means a fixed thing. The gold men are very strong and they are quite harmonious as compared with their silver opponents, who are divided both as to the ratio between gold and silver and upon other matters in connection with the free coinage of silver. The belief is in many quarters that solid gold men of the east will not support a silver candidate.

Radcliffe College, which is practically the woman's annex to Harvard University, is treated generously by its friends. Since February 1 it has received the following: $5,000 from Mrs. Josiah W. Fiske, for a college fund; $6,568 from the estate of Mrs. Catherine P. Perkins; $2,000 for the Library, the balance of the late General Hincks's gift to Radcliffe; and $16,000 in cash and $5,000 in marketable securities from Sarah Parker's estate. Start a good institution in the United States and there is no end to the wealth which will roll in upon it.

TROUT CROSS ROCKIES.

[From the Portland Oregonian.]

Away back in the prehistoric mists of the world all of northwestern America was covered miles deep in ice and snow, and remained so, no one knows for how long. During this period spectacles of extraordinary grandeur might have been seen in the awful combat between the violent forces of nature. At times the confined gases in the heated interior of the earth could be no longer restrained and would burst forth with terrific fury. For miles in extent the earth would be burst asunder, and great volumes of fire, flame and molten matter would issue forth and engage in a terrible conflict with ice and snow. Vast floods of hot lava would attack mountains of ice and snow, only to be cooled and made helpless, while the water freed from the ice and snow rushed to the combat at some other point. In this way the fire and water were every day in mortal combat in the process of making the great mountain chains of the continent.

But the water and ice and the snow could not be vanquished, for always when the water was thrown back and repulsed it rushed to the combat at some other point as vigorously as before. For miles in extent great furnaces belched forth flame and fire amid miles deep of ice and snow, and for ages this struggle between these elements continued with relentless fury. Finally the fire retreated, leaving great stretches of country to its enemy, that it might concentrate its strength where its strength was needed. So, century after century, they wrestled with each other, the fire, the ice and the water, but the ice steadily gained, for the great ocean ever lay behind it. The cold ice age had killed all the plants in the region, and had driven off all the animals that could be driven and killed the rest.

Finally there came a change in the poise of the earth, and the winters grew shorter and the summers longer. The south wind blew and melted the ice first from the plains, then from the mountains. The water ran down the sides of the lava beds, cutting deep gorges or canyons so deep that the sun can hardly see the bottom. Finally, when the snow was all gone and all was peace between the fire and water, the creatures came back and the grass and meadow flowers of a hundred kinds came up from the valleys below. The beaver cut his timber and patiently worked at his dam; the thriftless porcupine destroyed a tree for every morning meal, and the bear and the buffalo each carried on his own affairs in his own way, as did a host of lesser animals, all of which rejoiced when this ice-bound region was at last open for settlement. The willow and the aspen took their place again by the brookside, and the fir and mountain pine covered the hills with their sombre green. The birds came back, and the wild goose swam the lakes, and the summer wren carroled and screamed in his bright song.

But alas! the fish—where were they? Those that had once lived in the mountain stream were no longer there. They had been boiled or frozen, and in one way or another killed or driven away, and they could not get back. Each stream had its canyon, and each canyon had its cataract, so high that no trout could leap over. Although they used to try it every day, not one ever succeeded. For years and years and years the fishes have leaped against the falls of the Gardiner, the Gibbon, the Yellowstone and Firehole rivers, only to fall back helpless at the falls below.

But the mighty falls of the Yellowstone they finally overcome, and this is the way it was done—by going around the continent and climbing up the brick staircase of the Rocky Mountains. It was a bold undertaking to travel thousands of miles by sea and then cross a range of mountains to reach a point only a few miles distant, but nothing daunts the courage of the trout. After getting into the Pacific Ocean they finally reached the Columbia, which they followed up to the Snake river, then followed up the Snake, passed Heart Lake, and then into a stream called Pacific Creek, which rises on the very crest of the divide.

In the space between this stream, which runs west to help form the Snake, and a stream called Atlantic Creek, which flows east to help make the Yellowstone, the great chain of the Rocky Mountains shrinks to a narrow basin of damp meadow, less than a quarter of a mile in width. Some years, when the snows are heavy and late in the spring, this whole region is covered with water, and the trout abided their time until the right time came, and when it did they were ready for action, and before the meadow had drained they had crossed the Rocky Mountains, and passed from the Pacific to the Atlantic side of the continent. As the time went by this colony of trout grew and multiplied and filled the waters of the great Clear Lake, where their descendants are found to this day.

No other fish has ever been able to climb Pacific Creek and none has ever been seen in the headwaters of the other stream above the falls of the Atlantic side.

Say Mr. "Law-ree-yay."

CITIZENS' FAREWELL.

ADDRESS PRESENTED TO REV. DR. MACRAE.

Feeling Reply by the Recipient.

A farewell address was presented to Rev. Dr. Macrae in the Y. M. C. A. rooms this morning. There was a large attendance of clergymen and citizens present and the chair was occupied by Rev. Henry Daniel. After prayer had been offered by Rev. Dr. Wilson the chairman said that in accordance with the usual custom the Evangelical Alliance had been summoned to meet on the first Monday in the month, but there was a specialty connected with this meeting and that was to meet and present to Dr. Macrae an address of farewell. He had first met Dr. Macrae in St. John's, Newfoundland, many years ago, and a friendship and regard for him had sprung up which had continued to exist. He was sorry that St. John was losing such an able and highly adapted minister, but he felt Dr. Macrae would be blessed wherever he went and he congratulated him on entering a wider sphere of usefulness. Rev. Mr. Daniel then read the following address, all present standing:

ST. JOHN, N. B., July 2, 1896.

DEAR DR. MACRAE:

We, your brother ministers and fellow-citizens, cannot suffer you to depart from among us without marking the occasion by an expression of our regret at losing you, while at the same time congratulating you and the college which will have the advantage of your supervision, upon an appointment which will so greatly strengthen the cause of higher education in the Province of Quebec. For more than twenty years you have occupied a conspicuous position among the citizens and ministers of our city. Your ministerial colleagues of every denomination have ever found in you a catholic sympathy of mind, and a generous appreciation of the work done by other branches of Christ's Church. This was practically exemplified some years ago, when (at your invitation) representative ministers of all our churches met at your house, and discussed the great question of Christian union, with much profit to all concerned. And the same principle was displayed in your attachment to the Evangelical alliance, having been a member from the first, and having been unanimously elected to the post of President during the present year.

But no less have you made your mark among us as one who never suffered his ministerial responsibilities to obscure his interest as a citizen of Saint John in all her interests and vicissitudes. In the days of sad memory succeeding the great fire of 1877, your sagacity and business capacity were of great value in the organization of relief, and on many other occasions the same qualities were freely given to the benefit of the public cause.

But in another capacity you have given help, which will now be enjoyed by our sister Province of Quebec, in the work of higher education.

The University Extension movement, which presents so invaluable an opportunity for those who cannot attend regular college classes, received your support from the first and your practical help in two courses of lectures. We feel that the staff of Morrin College will enjoy the advantage of the supervision of one who will possess not only large capacity as a teacher, but the requisite tact and wisdom for the direction of academical discipline.

Praying that the blessing of Almighty God may attend you in your future career,

We remain,
Sincerely and affectionately yours,

Rev. Dr. Macrae accepted the address and spoke as follows:

Brothers in the Christian ministry and fellow-citizens:—

It would be simply unnatural to receive so evidently cordial an address on the occasion of my approaching departure from this pleasant city without some expression of gratitude and reciprocal kindly wishes. Let me sincerely and cordially own to a conviction, were it becoming at all upon such an occasion, to indulge in criticism of what has received the meed of your unanimous approval, that the language employed by you is alike too laudatory of my humble abilities and too generous in its appreciation of my very imperfect efforts to realize even my own ideal of what duty may justly demand from a man in relation to the public and to his profession. But it would, at the same time, be unbecoming and presumptuous to challenge your verdict as a whole—to set my single judgment against that of a number, all equally entitled to express an opinion. And it would be not less impertinent than base to impute the men of cultured and independent habits of thought and expression and intention to indulge merely in the language of flattery. There is, admittedly, a measure of truth in the adage, "Vox populi, vox Dei." Our neighbors are, so far, a mirror in which the character, especially of those compelled by their circumstances to occupy public positions, is more or less perfectly reflected. Or, they are a jury in the sentence agreed upon, among whom one may read what he has in some degree consciously aimed at and attained. And thus regarded it is permissible and legitimate, under however grave a sense of unworthiness, to respond to and to cherish this most friendly address with somewhat of pride.

Acceptance of the utterly unsought for and unexpected position of principal over Morrin College, Quebec, and so of succession to the late justly revered Dr. Cooke, necessitates bidding farewell to the active duties of the ministry in the respects in which these devolve upon a "placed" pastor. And this is an aspect of the change implied not to be contemplated without some feeling of regret. Than the work of an ordinary minister there is none nobler, in my estimation, none more dignified and honorable. And, however imperfectly these duties have been discharged by me, it remains to be seen whether my powers are even equally adapted to the successful prosecution of those incident to the new and untried position of professional labor. Your sanguine and appreciative anticipations may, let me hope, prove prophetic; they will certainly operate as a spur, stimulating me to leave no righteous measure untried that may conduce to the realization of what your words bid me to forecast.

In regard to the question of Christian union, any practical effort in that direction on my part was really aroused into activity, it is proper in the interest of truth to say, by the words and spirit of one of your number, who, alike from the ardor of his disposition and by reason of his scholarly investigations and treatment of one large historic phase of the theme, as well as by repeated pulpit and platform action and utterances bearing thereupon, has given abundant pledges that, while he is spared to labor for the welfare of humanity, the duty of toiling to heal the divisions marring the efficiency of the churches —or, at any rate, to mitigate any tendencies to strife, and to cultivate all possible manifestations of goodwill among brethren "agreeing to differ"—shall not cease to be upheld. But the rector of what is familiarly known as the "Stone church" needs only be referred to in any convention of the citizens of St. John to render further remark in this, or in any direction entitling to respect, unnecessary. And it is permissible to cherish the hope that what he, with others now present, have thus striven for, on the platform, in friendly discussion, or by published volume, may be realized, if not in the form of corporate at least in that of cordial co-operative union, as to constrain the cry on all hands "See, how these Christians love one another." The brotherly spirit displayed in this direction by all of the members of this branch of the Alliance will to me be a permanently pleasant recollection, and my fervent prayer is that your influence for good may so expand as, at no distant date, to fill to the utmost the desires of those worthies of the past—"not lost but gone before"—the Armstrongs, Daniels, McMillans, Prichards, Botsfords and the like, under whose auspices the efforts of the Alliance were guided at my first connection with this organization.

You have done me the honor to refer to labors of mine in connection with the calamity of 1877. As to my connection with the fire your words give me opportunity to congratulate this city on the spirit displayed by its citizens. St. John showed itself to be an abode of heroes, to be crushed by no losses, to be daunted by no difficulties. My work in the University Extension course was a labor of love. As to my future labors your too generous words of sympathy and affection will not be my feeblest support and incitement.

And so, brethren of the Alliance and fellow-citizens, farewell. From time to time, I dream, at any rate, of refreshing my acquaintanceship with one and another of your number. For St. John has, and will have permanently, ties binding me to an interest in its movements, to the attractions of which it would be unnatural to offer any resistance. Again with heartfelt thanks, and fervent prayers for the welfare of one and all, let me assure you that I shall cherish this kindly but too complimentary address as one of my most valued family jewels.

Short addresses were then made by Rev. Messrs. Pope, Carey, Gates, Fotheringham, Wilson, de Soyres, Clarke, Shenton and Mr. J. E. Irvine, all of whom expressed regret at the removal of Dr. Macrae from St. John, who by his admirable and eminently intellectual ability had not only been a worthy and Christain citizen, but also by his enunciations of the principles of the Alliance had proven himself a valuable member.

After the doxology the gathering dispersed.

Miss Elliott was quite young, and was the daughter of Mrs. Edward Elliott, of High street.

Kinney referred to his case and how he came to take the action he did in meeting with the Methodist church in Nova Scotia.
