EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for our breakfast and supper a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

THE CHURCH IN ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Stepney made an ideal visitation the other day to St. Augustine's, in that quarter of East London from which he takes his title. He first came on the evening of a week day, and met the congregation and Church workers at an informal reception. He inquired into the affairs of the parish and all its parts and adjuncts, and putting himself in touch with everybody, he received such direct and candid answers to his questions as must have supplied him with food for thought for some time to come. There were a bewildering number of organizations, over 100 in fact, and if the Bishop wrote down all the information he received, some of it quite of a novel character, it must have made a respectable volume. Of the women who represented the mothers' meeting the Bishop asked: "And is there a fathers' meeting?" to which the ready reply was made: "There was one till lately." "And did they sew?" "No, they smoked." It transpired that there were now two clubs, one "the men's club" and the other the "young men's club." "And what is the difference," asked the Bishop, "between a man and a young man?" "O, the young men are not married." The reception wound up with a concert by the choral society, followed, of course, by refreshments. On the next Sunday the Bishop came again and joined in the worship of this congregation, gathered out of the squalor and ugliness of Stepney, and preached such a sermon as such a bishop might be expected to preach. At the conclusion of the beautiful choral Eucharist, he blessed them. Again he met them at the church door and in the street, where they thronged about him, and rejoiced to shake his hand or get a word from him, until he went his way. "Henceforth," says the writer of this account, "he need never be surprised when he is down East, at men, women, or children suddenly greeting him with outstretched hand."

A petition has been presented to Lord Salisbury from a number of prominent lay members of the Evangelical party, urging the importance of appointing a larger number of representatives of that party to positions of ecclesiastical authority. They speak of such persons as those "who will be prepared to uphold firmly the character of the Church of England as settled at the Reformation." In conclusion, the petitioners pray Lord Salisbury to give such attention to their memorial "as may tend to remove just ground of complaint from a large and most loyal body of Churchmen." The history of the Catholic movement, from the Oxford days onward, might teach these gentlemen that temporal advantages in the way of high place and official station are comparatively unimportant, if character, learning and enthusiastic devotion to principle are not lacking. Lord Salisbury replied as follows: Dear Lord Midleton,—I am much obliged to you for your letter, and the memorial which you forward to me. I need hardly say, it shall have my most careful attention. Yours very truly, SALISBURY.

The Bishop of Rochester, Dr. Talbot, who is everywhere winning the confidence and exciting the admiration of the clergy and laity of his diocese, has inaugurated a new departure, by taking up his residence in the most crowded part of his diocese, South London. Unlike most of his brethren, he is so fortunate as not to be burdened with a "palace," or see house built in the days when the incomes of the bishops were three or four times their present value. A sum of money for a residence was placed at his disposal when the diocese was re-constituted; and with this he has built a house in the middle of South London; a house commodious and useful, but, as the Bishop is eager to make clear, "not a palace, nor to be called one." Doubtless most of the Bishops wish that they could follow his example. In many dioceses, perhaps in most, the palace is far too large for a modern prelate's needs; yet it cannot be disposed of and has to be kept up at great expense, at the cost of an inability to respond to other and much more pressing diocesan claims.

There is no truth in the rumor that the Archbishop of Canterbury has appointed a commission of inquiry into the validity of Roman orders; a question which has been raised several times lately by the reception of Roman priests into the Catholic Church of England, and the subsequent recognition of their orders received from the prelates of the Italian mission. Grave difficulties are raised, not only by the fact that their orders are schismatical, but also by the breaking of the papal succession and the uncertainty introduced by the ordinations of the infidel prelates of the Renaissance and the Revolution. But it is said that the Archbishop will take the more charitable view, and will for the present admit the claims of Roman priests to valid orders. I am informed, on good authority, that in the case of an English priest who recently seceded to the Italian mission their bishops have not only refused to reordain him, even conditionally, but have even directed him to reassume the habit of a priest, which he had laid aside, until the appearance of the report of the Pope's Commission of Inquiry.

The Family Churchman tells its readers that at a recent meeting in Chicago, "one hundred and fifty men in holy orders" gave a unanimous vote in favor of placing the Bible selections set forth by the Woman's Educational Union in the public schools. It is true such a resolution was passed in a meeting of ministers of various denominations, but none of them were in "holy orders," as Churchmen on this side the Atlantic understand that expression. Our English contemporary also says there is nothing in the book "that can offend the Jew or the Nationalist." "The Jew" we know, but who "the Nationalist" may be, or why he should care about the matter one way or the other, we are unable to imagine. We know of no sect or party in the United States which goes under that designation.

PRAYER FOR THE DEPARTED.

In connection with the anniversary of the English Church Union, held 25th June, an evening meeting was held in the Freemasons' Tavern, Viscount Halifax presiding, supported by (amongst others) the Bishop of Nassau, Dean of Lichfield, Dean of Chichester, Rev. Canon Douglas.

DEAN LUCKOK'S ADDRESS.

The Dean of Lichfield said: My Lord, ladies and gentlemen,—The resolution put in my hands is in these terms:

That this Union desires to place on record its deep sense of obligation to the Guild of All Souls for its charitable labors in impressing on members of the Anglican Communion the duty of prayer for the faithful departed, and its thankfulness for the success which under God has attended its efforts in restoring the Solemn Offering of the Holy Eucharist at funerals and commemorations of the dead in Christ.

I have just returned from wanderings amongst the mountains of Switzerland and the Austrian Tyrol, and I never go amongst the mountains without recalling a remarkable scene I once witnessed. It exactly illustrates what I want to say to you. It is now nearly forty years ago that I ascended (when it was not at all so common to do so as it has since become) one of the highest mountains in Switzerland, to witness the sun rise. When it was approaching dawn, the bugle sounded, and I hurried from my bed, to be met by a great disappointment, for on every side of me was a vast expanse of cloud and mist, and nothing else. But I was induced to stay, while many who were there hurried back to their beds, and I need hardly tell you that I was rewarded for my patience. In a very short time the clouds and the mists began to disperse, and the great mountain-tops, the Eiger, the Monch, the Jungfrau, and Finsteraarhorn, emerged from the chaos; and at last every trace of the mist and fog disappeared; and a great vast landscape—a vision I am sure that will never fade from my memory—lay stretched out before me. It is no inapt figure of that vision which the student of the history of the church in this country has witnessed in part; which I believe he is destined in God's good time to witness in its entirety under the blessed influence of that glorious movement which we naturally call the Catholic Revival. When the year 1833 dawned upon the eyes of Newman and his followers the vision of the church which opened before them was in many respects not unlike the vision which I first saw when I went out on that mountain top; the Church which he and his fellows were longing to see in at least something of the resurrection glory, and its primitive beauty and proportions, was enveloped completely in mist and fog. Its spirituality—it had been overcast by the chilling influence of the widespread Erastianism; its worship, it had been long buried in a deep impenetrable sleep; its sacramental system, it had been almost entirely evacuated of its life-giving power, and its whole supernatural life (under the baneful influence of the Georgian era, and its terrible indifference and unbelief), it had been well nigh struck with the paralysis of death. It was indeed a disappointing vision to Newman and his followers, and I think, when we realize it, we can hardly be surprised (though we can never cease to deplore it, and we shall go on deploring it to the end of time) that Newman was impatient. If only he had been content to wait; if only, in addition to those tremendous gifts with which God had endowed him, He had added the great gift of patience, he would have been a vision of beauty far excelling, exceeding, anything that even in his most sanguine moments he could have looked for; the great peaks of Catholic doctrine and practice emerging one by one from chaos; he would have seen the long-hidden features of the grand old historic Church of this land one by one illumined with the fresh radiance from the Spirit of God; and I do believe he would have been satisfied with the vision, and that he would have died in peace in the arms which first embraced him. (Cheers.) It is a lesson, my friends, which I hope God will write in the hearts of many of my brethren, who, I think, are impatient at the present time, longing and burning for the time when they will get the full recognition of Catholic doctrine and practice in the Church of England. It is a lesson which I pray many of us will carry away to-night when there is need—the need never was greater—of that quality, the want of which has robbed the English Church of some of her noblest sons, and the possession of which will, I believe—I believe it in the light of what has been already done—in God's good time bring back to us all that He sees fit for us to have.

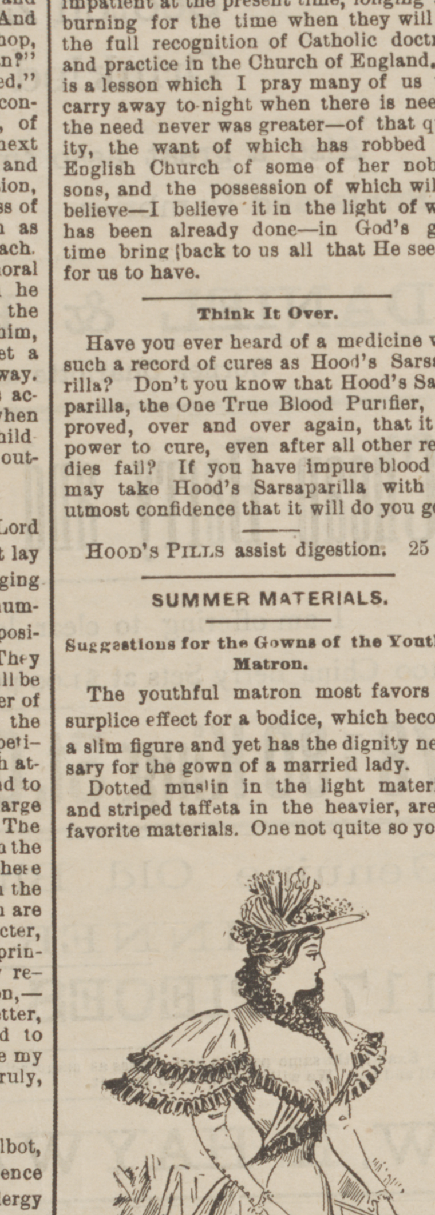
SUMMER MATERIALS.

Suggestions for the Gowns of the Youthful Matron.

The youthful matron most favors the surplice effect for a bodice, which becomes a slim figure and yet has the dignity necessary for the gown of a married lady.

Dotted muslin in the light materials, and striped taffeta in the heavier, are the favorite materials. One not quite so youthful is a black and white mohair mixture, which has a delightful silvery gray effect.



Mousseline de soie is another popular fabric for dressy costumes, while others of silk and wool are very smart for the summer promenade.

For travelling, gloria silk is finding great favor, since it sheds dust so easily. The shades in which it can be secured are limited, however, as it is but recently that other use than umbrella covering has been found for it.

To return to the surplice, it is used most effectively on a travelling gown of brown gloria, trimmed with pleatings of black silk. The garment is cut a la princesse, with very full skirt. A slash in the skirt is buttoned close half-way down, and at the bottom is slightly apart to reveal a black silk underskirt.

The surplice forms double shoulder caps, then singles and narrows, as it crosses the front, winds its way about the waist and finishes with two long ends, hanging almost to the foot.

A thick ruche of black silk finishes the neck. THE LATEST.

WANTED—THREE THOUSAND WIVES.

A City on Vancouver Island Where Women Are at a Premium.

There is a city in the western part of Canada, close to the Pacific ocean, which is named by all who visit it the most desolate spot upon the face of the earth. Its climate is good, its natural resources excellent, its houses fair, its streets well paved, yet within this town there is an air of forlorn dejection that strikes the most careless traveler that comes within its boundary.

It is on Vancouver island—a sweet, fair spot. And the desolation is caused by one thing—one only—the lack of women and girls.

This particular town is scarcer of the product than others of its locality. There are many towns upon the island, but this one lacks women so sadly that in a recent census of the place it was found nearly 3,000 short. This number included a count of serving women, women to do the work of the house, cook and wash and iron. It also included working girls and women who are not expected to marry. And, of course, it took in the queens of the city, the fair matrons of the homes and the mistresses of the pretty establishments.

Today the doorsteps of these houses yawn vacantly and the vines fluttering over the portals seem to say, "She comes not yet."

The greatest bargain sale of wives ever known took place upon a recently opened domain—a few years ago. A frantic call was sent to the cities for 100 women. And poor girls, out of fun and curiosity and willingness to have a home, went out there. The men met them at the station. The girls looked them over shyly. By evening all the girls had found boarding places in the wooden shanties of the "town." And by Sunday the parson was kept busy tying the nuptial knots. The prettiest girls and the richest ones got the wealthiest men. A girl with $50 was an heiress and a man with $100 a prince. The plain girls took up with poor fellows, with hopes and chances. It was a quick, natural selection.

One very handsome fellow, with blond curls, got a very pretty girl, though neither had a cent. It was a case of beauty. The rude courtship was carried on in the three evenings between the time the girls arrived and Sunday, and within a week there were nearly 100 small wooden houses going up in the town.

There is no name for this peculiar state of society where women are wanted to make homes and where money is laid down for them and paid to them to queen it over a home. A glaring headline in an English paper once called it "The Barter of Women In America." But among those who see the satisfactory after workings it is merely the good natured consent of the girls to adjust themselves to their country, which is yet new enough not to be as evenly distributed as it will be when the twenty-first century man and woman come in.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Electricity and Vegetation.

As there are a great many references in our scientific exchanges of late to the influence of electricity on germinating seeds and growing plants we will state that such experiments are not new. Researches in that line were carried on away back in the fifties. In 1858 H. F. Baxter of Scotland wrote as follows in The British Botanical Review: "As it may be considered a law in vegetable physiology that all plants have a tendency during the germination of their seeds to develop in two diametrically opposite directions, the root and the stem, the question arose, Might not this direction be influenced or counteracted by submitting the germinating seeds to a current of electricity? Accordingly, a series of experiments were undertaken which were carried out with elaboration of detail. After months of patient experimenting I feel justified in announcing that no definite conclusions were drawn from them as to the relative effect of the electricity, although each series of experiments was varied and multiplied."—St. Louis Republic.

The Suez Canal.

A letter, recently published, from Bonaparte to his friend Paul I, the emperor of Russia, shows that but for the assassination of the latter in 1801 the Suez canal might have been cut many years before 1869. Napoleon wrote that the British threatened to invade Egypt and that their pride and insolence should be rebuked. He added: "The Suez canal, which will unite the Mediterranean and the Indian ocean, is surveyed. It is a work which can be finished within a short time and which would prove to be of incalculable benefit to Russian commerce." It is interesting to note that the diplomatic representative of France in Egypt at that time was M. de Lesseps, the father of Ferdinand de Lesseps, who finally accomplished the great undertaking.

Finger Rings In the British Museum.

The large and varied collection of finger rings includes some splendid specimens of Roman rings and some remarkable early Christian rings. Historically interesting is the gold ring of Ethelwulf, king of Wessex, which was found in a cart rut at Laverstock, Hampshire; as also one found near York which belonged to his daughter Ethelswitha, the sister of Alfred the Great. Nor must we forget the gold signet ring of Mary, queen of Scots. On the face is engraved the royal arms and the supporters of the kingdom of Scotland, with the motto, "In Defens" and her initials, "M. R."—Good Words.

What Happens.

In a written examination on physical geography one of the questions was:

"What happens when there is an eclipse of the moon?"

A boy with rather an admirable knack of getting out of a difficulty wrote the following answer:

"A great many people come out to look at it."—London Answers.
