RUSSEL OF KILLOWEN

WILL ATTEND THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION MEETINGS.

Sketch of the Career of England's Lord Chief Justice.

LONDON, Aug. 10.

Among the passengers who sailed on Saturday from Liverpool for New York on the Cunard Line steamer Umbria were Lord Russell, of Killowen, Lord Chief Justice of England, and Sir Frank Lockwood, M. P., Q C., formerly Solicitor General, who are going to America to attend the meeting of the American Bar Association at Saratoga.

The history of Lord Russell is one of great successes. He was born in 1833 in an old gray house at Ballybot, in the outskirts of Newry, Ireland, where his father had a brewery. His ancestry is honorable. Arthur Russell's family had been settled five or six hundred years at Killough, near Downpatrick. The adhered to the old faith through centuries of persecution, and their faithfulness is well imitated by this distinguished son. His mother's family belonged to Belfast. She was a woman of remarkable character, clever and prudent, singularly active in mind and body. The children were brought up in an atmosphere of all the virtues and were especially taught to observe the charity which is the queen of all virtues. Lord Russell's three sisters donned the robe of the order of the Sisters of Mercy, one being superior of the order on the Pacific coast. His only brother became a priest in the Society of Jesus. He is Rev. Matthew Russell, poet and editor of the Irish Monthly.

Sir Charles was named after his reverend uncle, C. W. Russell, the president of Maynooth College and a man of great literary ability. He contributed to the Edinburgh Review and was one of the originators of the Dublin Review. He is especially remembered as the friend and helper of Cardinal Newman. "He helped me more than anyone else, wrote the latter in the Apologia. "He was always gentle, mild, unobtrusive, uncontroversial. He let me alone," a quality of forbearance heartily to the taste of the famous Oxford convert, who protested in after years that he was "too old for controversy, but could play the violin with any man in England."

After obtaining his degree in Ireland Charles Russell married a sister of the sweet poet and novelist, Rosa Mulholland. He then embarked on his career in England. Everything was against the young lawyer, but his great abilities overcame all opposition. He sat in Parliament and was a staunch Home Ruler. He was made a Q. C. in 1872, but fresh honors were to await him.

In 1894 he was Attorney General of Great Britain and stood in the front rank of the English bar. As a lawyer there was no man more widely known in England, and, in the population, he was in the law courts the first man of his time. In America he was better known than all the other members of the English bar put together, if for no other reason than for tears—genuine tears—which he shed in his reply at the close of the Parnell commission. His great speech in vindication of the Irish leaders against the London Times before the commission was the greatest effort of his life. Not since the days of Burke's arraignment of Warren Hastings had public interest been so centered in a court of justice. The small room was crowded with the most distinguished men and women, not only of London but of America. Russell's oratory brought the tears to the eyes of that distinguished audience and placed his name among the great ones of the world.

But destiny stepped in and closed his career at the bar. Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, brother of the distinguished Jesuit, was dead. By long usage the office was to be offered to the Attorney General. Would Sir Charles accept? The situation was full of interest.

Sir Charles had an ambition—he wanted to sit on the woolsack; to be the keeper of the Queen's conscience; to be the head of the legal profession, and to be the first Roman Catholic Lord Chancellor of England and Ireland since the days of the Stuarts. This would be immortality in history. Lord Rosebery, the Liberal leader, was willing; but there was a difficulty. Lord Herschell was already on the woolsack and intended to stay there. Sir Charles looked at the woolsack and sighed, and then sat down in the vacant chair. History may tell more, but that is how Charles Russell became Lord Chief Justice of England, with a seat in the House of Lords as Baron Russell of Killowen.

The elevation of Sir Charles Russell was universally popular among his brethren of the bar. The occasion of his taking the oath was a memorable scene. All day long people went in and out to hear him speak, for he always had a musical voice. Although opinions differed, everyone was glad that Russell's merits had been recognized; and without exception everyone bowed to the risen sun—Lord Russell of Killowen, Lord Chief Justice of England. In losing Sir Charles the English bar lost its finest orator. He stood alone There was no one like him, and no one of equal merit. Some people praised his oratory at the expense of his legal knowledge, and they said he was no lawyer. Some people find it difficult to praise a man highly as the possessor of two qualities. It draws too much on their generosity. But Sir George Lewis—no mean judge—said Russell was a great lawyear and the best verdict getter in the kingdom.

His elevation to the bench left him a poorer man in the pocket. As a lawyer his annual income was over £30,000. But the honor repays any pecuniary loss.

In his early days he had a good deal to put up with from older men and judges who thought to prune down his exuberance, and he might have been snuffed out as so many men have been, but for the splendid combative element with which he was endowed. If he could help it he would not be sat on, and was often very irritable when interrupted. His native wit made him formidable. One day Sir Digby Seymour, Q. C., kept up a flow of small talk when Russell was speaking.

"I wish you would be quiet, Saymore," said Russell, with his Irish accent.

"May name is Seymour, if you please," replied the learned gentleman, with mock dignity.

"Then I wish you would see more and say less," was the rejoinder.

But Russell was always kindly natured, and when he stung it was simply in self-defence.

It is not perhaps generally known that the Lord Chief Justice at one time practised as a solicitor. He was articled to a firm in Newry, where he was born, but finished his articles with another firm in Belfast, where he practised for a short time before entering himself at Lincoln's Inn, where he had nothing to do but to eat his dinners in order to secure a "call." Everything is different now, and the examinations become stiffer every year or two. Russell's training in a solicitor's office gave many advantages in early days, and it is observed that the Lord Chief Justice will not now listen to any application for delay made in court if there is the slightest suspicion that the delay has been occasioned through the laziness or carelessness of the solicitors. He does not spare himself nor claim any privilege on account of rank.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

The Full Significance of the Privy Council Ruling in Stewart vs. McLean—The Judgment of the Canadian Supreme Court Criticised.

LONDON, Aug. 3.

As was anticipated in a previous despatch, the Privy Council have given judgment in favor of Stewart in the celebrated case of Stewart vs. McLean, reversing the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, and restoring the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench and Superior Court. The case is regarded as one of vast importance to commercial circles in Canada. It establishes the right of partners in insolvent concerns after settlement with creditors has been made to claim on each other for failure to contribute their proper share of the capital of the partnership, and to bear a relative share of losses. It is conceded here, too, that certain of the Supreme Court of Canada judges must have either failed to appreciate the facts or were perhaps overworked to such an extent as often results in ill-matured judgments.

AWHEEL ON RIVERSIDE DRIVE.

Where New Yorkers Wheel When the Sun Goes Down.

Between two hills the river gleams. Here and there upon its quiet bosom a shadow silently moves, with green and red and white lights sparkling about. On the far hill movable lights of trolley cars dart in and out among the foliage, while just at one's feet are myriads of lights which appear around the corner and fly to some point not far to the north. Nothing but the lights are seen. Nothing is heard but an occasional murmur of voices and silvery laughter.

Such is Riverside Drive after night has fallen. But a short while before, when the twilight was deepening, each light revealed a figure—a human ant—seated upon a wheel and riding swiftly, it almost seemed to the brow of the hill, there to disappear as though he had gone down. One after another, all seemingly bent on his own destruction, went the same way.

Still earlier, when the sun was rosy in the West, the figures appeared distinctly. Then the garments of the riders were discernible, and one might admire what the Knickerbocker girl awheel is wearing.

Linen suits there are aplenty. In fact, little else is worn. The suits have skirts of ankle length, with knickerbockers of the skirt material beneath, and a bolero, or skirted basque, over a shirt waist. This shirt waist is pink for the most part, although a wise girl, who knows how her face flushes from riding, will wear a Scotch plaid with considerable blue or green. These plaid waists are being worn more and more as the season advances.

Few stiff collars are worn on the wheel. They soon lose their stiffness, and are not to be compared to the ribbon stock.

But it is not so much what you wear as how you wear it. Let every girl who rides a wheel look well to her skirt. Let it be short in the back rather than long. There is nothing more ungainly than a female rider whose skirt is short in front, and dragging almost to the ground in the back. She doesn't need length in the back.

Another important point for a fair cyclist to remember is that she must stand and sit gracefully. Cycling, unfortunately, does make women mannish.

I hate, as a lover of the wheel, to say so, but if the tendency to stand and act as a man would only be resisted, a woman need lose none of her grace.

Here is a picture. A young girl, with linen suit, stands at the curb. She stands with arms akimbo, with her head and shoulders thrown back, her feet apart, her skirt several inches too short in front, several too long in the back.

Let every cyclist beware of falling into these same errors. THE LATEST.

THE RIVER.

[Harper's Round Table.]

Down through the fields, by the poplars and birches,
Into the towns past the houses and churches,
On through the night while the curfew is tolling,
The river goes bubbling and foaming and rolling
Under the bridges and over the stones,
Winding through swampland that nobody owns,
Spraying, and splashing, and murmuring free—
Onward it speeds from the hills to the sea!

WILD RELIGIOUS FANATICISM.

NELSONVILLE, Ohio, Aug. 6.

New Pittsburg, a mining camp a few miles from this city, is the scene of the most intense religious excitement, bordering upon fanaticism. The leaders claim to be in personal communication with the Lord and to act under instructions from Him. Excitement is so high that families have been broken up and there have been numerous fights over the matter. The people have tried every way to get rid of the fanatics, but failed. Warrants were sworn out to day for the arrest of the leaders, Mart Zearls and his two brothers, and when arraigned before the justice they were furious, and denounced the court in most bitter terms, insulting the justice, even climbing up on the desk and spitting upon him. The trio were finally placed in jail, and Mart was taken to the asylum. The others will surely follow. Their followers number about 150, some of whom have given as high as $150 each upon being converted. The more conservative people predict that the trouble will end in bloodshed.

AFFAIRS IN WALL STREET MORE OR LESS STAGNANT.

Interest in the November Presidential Contest Continues.

[Henry Clews & Co.'s Circular.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.

The condition of affairs in Wall street remains more or less stagnant. Public movements have reached a stage of development which scarcely admits of anything but a large abstention from operations. The convention phase of the political excitement has passed its culmination. The issues are made up and the candidates are chosen. The first shock of the Chicago Convention and Populistic platforms and nominees has had its more acute effects, in which those factors have been discounted at their worst. The time for surprises is therefore about past, and attention is now fixed upon the developments of the ante-election canvass and the probabilities of the November vote. This is not exactly a stage for alarms, but for observation and deliberation; and most people are disposed to postpone operations for the present at least.

So far as respects investments, holders have already submitted to heavy losses under the recent decline in prices. It is quite likely that they may regard the present shrinkage as commensurate with any adverse circumstances that have happened or are reasonably likely to happen; and for that reason, in the absence of new threatening factors, there seems to be a fair probability that, as a rule, investors will hold on to their stocks with some tenacity from now until November, when important matters now in suspense will become accomplished certainties. In the meantime Wall street is disposed to a reaction from its mood of continuous excitement. The growing stagnancy affords an opportunity for operators to take recreation; and the arena of financial and political discussion is transferred from the Stock Exchange to the corridors of the rural hostelries. All this is conducive to quiet. A few timid holders of securities are still selling in moderate amounts, which easily affects prices unfavorably; but the cessation of alarms is likely to bring forward others who see in such realizings a favorable chance for buying back stock which they had sold at considerably higher prices.

As to the influence outside of politics, they have passed into a distinctly more favorable condition. The London market for our securities has been much steadier under the frights that have affected our market than might have been expected—showing that foreign investors find reasons for confidence which have been less appreciated at home. The transfers of gold to the treasury by the banks, and the wise arrangements of the foreign bankers for warding off exports of gold have placed the treasury in a position of safety against drains of gold for some time to come; and although these ameliorations are to some extent temporary, yet they ward off causes of disturbance for a period long enough to admit of a return of calm and of making arrangements that will protect the future. The suspension of gold exports thus effected will also have the result of checking the tendency towards stringency in time loans, and will enable the banks the more freely to accommodate the demand for currency incident to the fall crop movement. Another wholesome factor is the halt in the Southern railroad war, with the probability that the intervention of the court may result in a satisfactory settlement of the destructive hostilities between the companies concerned.

The drift of party movements is tending rather to allay than to encourage public distrust. It is now clear that there are to be three parties in the field; the Republican, the Democrats proper, and the Populist-Democracy. The first impression produced by this new party distribution was that it would be unfavorable to the chances of Mr. McKinley and the sound money cause; but the second thought is less favorable to that view. It is undeniable that the organization of the sound money Democrats will divert from the Republicans a large number of votes; but it is likely to take many times more votes from the Bryan ticket, and that, in some of the doubtful states, may give to McKinley a majority or plurality which he would not otherwise secure. This, of course, is a matter on which opinions may easily differ; but it is certain that the more sagacious Republican leaders are now entertaining no fears about the outcome of this new disposition of party forces. The junction of action between the Democrats and Populists will have a tendency to lessen the danger of that combination to the country. There is doubtless a very large number of Democrats who will act with the dissentient Democrats even though in doing so they may vote unwillingly against silver, rather than commit themselves to the violently disloyal and revolutionary planks of the Chicago and Populistic platforms. In fact, there is undoubtedly no little probability that the free silver vote may be nullified by the other grossly unpatriotic planks of these platforms. Public opinion is coming to attach less and less importance to these revolutionary threats. They are regarded as symptoms of tendencies, but not as expressive of any really formidable body of settled American sentiment. Men of sober judgment refuse to believe that the United States has suddenly reversed its regard for the most fundamental political institutions of the country. They view such a summersault as virtually an impossibility to human nature. But if so many Democrats are unprepared to commit to political revolution what is to become of the monetary revolution linked with it in the same platforms? All the probabilities arising from the nature of the case led to the conclusion that the Populo-Democracy will be found to have overleaped itself and will consummate its career next November in overwhelming defeat.
