

POETRY.

From the London Morning Chronicle.

ACCIDENTS IN THE FOG.

"Over the mountain, over the dell, Mist and Fog so moodily fell, Lady and Knight could hardly see, Lord from lover and friend from foe."

THE fog, I hear my friends complain, Produced on Sunday strange disasters; Some children look'd for aires in vain, Some wives mistook their lords and masters.

Lord Bexley's coachman, heedless fool, Missed his lordship's favorite preacher, Pulled up before an infant school, Of which one Joseph Bell was teacher.

I saw my cousin Tom pass by, Who, as was stated in the papers, Had gone to Baden in July, To cure his noble blood of vapours;

A man as sallow as a ghost, In Downing-street was sadly puzzled; And he was clinging to a post, And wishing all the mob were muzzled.

A learned Bishop, who is full Of Orthodoxy and of Hermand, Intended to take up John Bull, And took up, by mistake, a Sermon.

A Curate, looking much concerned, Was asking all he laid his paws on; "Which way has Mr. Dawson turned? Pray tell me, where is Mr. Dawson?"

When thus the Sun keeps house all day, No wonder people look for new light; Some feel convinced that Lewis was; Some teach that Simeon has the true light;

Why pause the mourners, who forbids our weeping, Who the dark pomp of sorrow has delay'd? Set down the birch—he is not dead but sleeping! Young man arise! He spake and was obey'd.

HYMN.

BY BISHOP HEBER.

WAKE not, oh mother! sounds of lamentation Weep not, oh widow! weep not hopelessly! Strong is his arm, the bringer of salvation!

Bear forth the cold corpse, slowly, slowly bear, Hide his pale features with the sable pall, Him, Child not the sad one wildly weeping o'er him, Widow'd and childless, she has lost her all.

Change then, oh sad one, grief to exultation! Worship and fall before Messiah's knee, Strong was his arm, the bringer of salvation! Strong was the word of God to succour thee!

MISCELLANY.

LIFE BEFORE THE FLOOD.

In the shape of "Fragments of an Antediluvian Diary," we have the following sketches, by Miss Jewsbury, of Manchester, whose name has lately come with much acceptance before the public.

The ideas are striking and political, and the language employed well suited to the occasion.

To-day I am a hundred years old. How blissful are the feelings of boyhood! My senses are acute as the tree with the shrinking leaf. My blood bounds through my veins as the river pours through the valley rejoicing in its strength.

Nearly three centuries have passed since my marriage. Can it be? It seems but yesterday since I sported like a young antelope round my father's tent, or, climbing the dark cedars, nestled like a bird among the thick boughs—and now I am a man in authority, as well as in the prime of life.

My eight hundredth birthday! And now I feel the approach of age and infirmity. My beard is become white as the blossoms of the almond tree; the stars look less bright than formerly; the flowers smell less odorous; I have laid Zillah in the tomb of the rock; Mileah is gone to the dwelling of Mahaleel; my sons take my place at the council and in the field;—all is changed. The long future is become the short past. The earth is full of violence;

The ancient and the honourable are sinking beneath the young and the vicious. The giants stalk through the length and breadth of the land, where once dwelt a quiet people;—all is changed. The beasts of the field and the monsters of the deep grow and press on us with unwonted fury; traditions, visions, and threatenings, are abroad. What a fearful doom hangs over this fair world, I knew not; it is enough that I am leaving it; yet another five or eight score years, and the tale will be complete. But have I, in every deed, trod this earth nearly a thousand years? It is false, I am yet a boy. I have had a dream—a long, long busy dream, of buying and selling; marrying and giving in marriage; of building and planting; feasting and warring; sorrowing and rejoicing; loving and hating;—but it is false to call it a life. Go to—it has been a vision of the night; and now that I am awake I will forget it. "Lamech, my son, how long is it since we planted the garden of oaks beside the river? Was it not yesterday?" "My father, dost thou sport? Those oaks cast a broad shadow when thy sister carried me beneath them in her arms, and wove me chaplets of their leaves."

THE ROSE.—I saw a rose in perfect beauty; it rested gracefully upon its stalk, and its perfume filled the air.—Many stopped to gaze upon it, many bowed to taste its fragrance, and its owner hung over it with delight. I passed it again, and behold it was gone—its stem was leafless—its root had withered; the enclosure which surrounded it was broken down. The spoiler had been there; he saw that many admired it; he knew it was dear to him who planted it, and beside it he had no other plant to love. Yet he snatched it secretly from the hand that cherished it; he wore it on his bosom till it hung its head and faded, and when he saw that its glory was departed, he flung it rudely away. But it left a thorn in his bosom, and vainly did he seek to extract it; for now it pierces the spoiler even in his hour of mirth.—And when I saw that no man who loved the beauty of the rose, gathered again its scattered leaves, or bound up the stalk which the hand of violence had broken, I looked earnestly at the spot where it grew, and my soul received instruction. And I said, Let her who is full of beauty and admiration, sitting like the queen of flowers in majesty among the daughters of women, let her watch lest vanity enter her heart, beguiling her to rest proudly upon her own strength; let her remember that she standeth upon slippery places; and be not high-minded but fear.—SIGOURNEY.

PULPIT ASTRONOMY.—Mr. Irving announced some time since, to one of his crowded congregations, that the planets are not yet inhabited, but that after the dissolution of this our globe, they will be possessed by the souls of just men made perfect.

ORIGINAL ANECDOTE.—Not long since, a native of our City, was asked, by a stranger in these parts, "whether small vessels ever went to London, during the winter season?" To which he replied, with great seriousness, "that owing to the immense quantity of ice in the river, the small vessels dare not venture up—but that the Steam-Boat went!" [This is a fresh specimen of native talent—the "march of intellect" among us, and another crying argument of the utility of erecting Colleges, &c.]

RULES FOR PRESERVING HEALTH.

Chiefly collected from Lord Bacon and Dr. Franklin. A man's own observation, what he finds good of, and what he finds hurt of, is the best physic to preserve health; but it is safer to say, "This agreeth not well with me, therefore I will not continue it;" than this, "I find no harm in this, therefore I may use it;" for strength of nature in youth passeth over many excesses which are owing to a man's ill nature. To be free-minded and cheerfully disposed at hours of meal and sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting.

Avoid envy, anxious fears, anger, fretting inwards, subtle and knotty questions, joys and exultations in excess, sadness not communicated. Entertain hopes, cheerfulness rather than joy; variety of delights rather than surfeit of them; wonder and admiration, and therefore novelties; studies that fill the mind with splendid and illustrious objects, as histories, fables, and contemplations of nature.

Celsius gives it as one of the greatest precepts of health and lasting, that a man do vary and interchange contraries; but with an inclination to the more benign extremes; now fasting and full eating, but rather full eating; watching and sleep, but rather sleep; sitting and exercise, but rather exercise, and the like; so shall nature be cherished, and yet taught masteries. Exercise should precede meals, and immediately follow them; the first promotes, the latter, unless moderate, obstructs digestion.

After exercise, we feed sparingly, the digestion will be easy and good, the body lightsome, the temper cheerful and all the animal functions performed as they should. Indulgence with full feeding, occasions nightmares and horrors inexpressible. In general, mankind, since the improvement of cookery eat about twice as much as nature requires. Restless nights naturally follow heavy suppers after full dinners. Some, however, rest well after these meals; it costs them only a frightful dream, and an apoplexy, after which they sleep till doomsday.

Light of the Moon.—When we look at the full moon in a clear night, the light in a short time becomes painful to the eyes; because, say some philosophers, reflected light has more effect upon the eyes than direct light. M. M. Bouguer and De la Hire found the proportion of the moon's light to that of the sun to be 1 to 300,000. When concentrated to a focus by means of a burning glass the moon light gives no heat.

THE CONTOUR.

Being a new Treatise on the Perspective of LANDSCAPE DRAWING. In which the points of sight and distance are expressed, that the vanishing ones depending upon the first, are calculated and explained, and the proportionate, or perspective Lines of the picture fully developed. This Work is introduced a novel theory never before published, as respects The Atmospheric, The Panoramic, and Dioramic Lines, with demonstrations in favor of its accuracy.

By WILLIAM HUNT, M.D. This Work will be printed in Quarto, and delivered to Subscribers, at 12s. 6d. each, stitched. A Specimen of the Style of the Plates may be seen at this Office. St. John, May 23, 1829.
