POETRY.

THE OLD MAN'S FUNERAL.

I saw an aged man upon his bier,
His hair was thin and white, and on his brow
A record of the cares of many a year;
Cares, that were ended and forgotton now,
And there was sadness round, and faces bowed,
And woman's tears fell fast and children wailed aloud.

Then rose another hoary man and said,
In faltering accents, to that weeping train,
Why mourn ye, that our aged friend is dead;
Ye are not sad to see the gathered grain,
Nor when their mellow fruit the orchards cast,
Nor when the yellow woods shake down the ripened mast.

Ye sigh not when the sun his course fulfilled,
His glorious course, rejoicing earth and sky,
In the soft evening, when the winds are stilled,
Sinks where his island of refreshment lie,
And leaves the smile of his departure, spread
O'er the warm-colored heaven, and ruddy mountain head.

Why weep ye then for him, who, having run
The bound of man's appointed years, at last,
Life's blessings all enjoyed, life's labors done,
Serenely to his final rest has past;
While the soft memory of his virtues, yet
Lingers like twilight hues, when the bright sun is set.

His youth was innocent; his riper age,
Marked with some act of goodness every day,
And watched by eyes that loved him, calm & sage,
Faded his late declining years away,
Cheerful he gave his being up, and went
To share the holy rest that waits a life well spent.

That life was happy; every day he gave
Thanks, for the fair existence, that was his;
For a sick fancy made him not her slave,
To mock him with her phantom miseries.
No chronic tortures racked his aged limb,
For luxury and sloth had nourished none for him.

And I am glad that he has lived thus long,
And glad that he has gone to his reward;
Nor deem that kindly nature did him wrong,
Softly to disengage the vital cord.
When his weak hand grew palsied and his eye
Dark with the mists of age, it was his time to die.

STANZAS,

BY THE AUTHOR OF "RICHELIEU."

I've sat and seen one bright wave chase
Its fellow on the strand,
Then fall away, nor leave a trace
Upon the printless sand—
Though scarce the pebbles felt the shock,
The waves have worn the solid rock!

I've sat and heard the autumn wind,
Amid the branches play,
So softly mild, so blandly kind,
It scarcely stirr'd the spray—
Yet soon it bore spring's verdant birth
To wither on its native earth.

I've sat and seen the evening sun
Sink from the golden sky,
His long bright race of glory run
And close his golden eye:
So slow he pass'd, scarce chang'd the light,
And yet he left the world in night.

And like yon sea is human life,
Events, like billows roll,
Moment on moment, strife on strife,
That change us to the soul;
And joys, like autumn leaves fall fast—
Hope sets—and being's light is past.

I've stood on earth's most daring height,
And seen day's ruler rise,
In his magnificence of light,
In triumph through the skies,
And all the darkness of the world,
From his shining presence hurled.

All too, that fades upon the earth,
Too weak to linger here,
Re-blossoms with a second birth,
To deck the coming year;
Shall hope, then, man's eternal dower,
Be frailer than a falling flower!

Ah no! like autumn leaves that die,
That bloom again in spring,
Fresh joys shall rise from those gone by,
And purer incense bring,
And when, like suns, hope sets in night,
Shall she not beam from world's more bright?

MISCELLANY.

THE MILITIA OF NOVA-SCOTIA.

Extract from Moorsom's Letters.

'Prodigious!' I hear you exclaim.—'Twenty-five thousand men organized as a provincial force in that out of the way quarter!' True, without a doubt, in the abstract; but let us examine a little more closely that organization which looks so pretty upon paper. The levee en masse involves, I apprehend the certainty of a Scylla and Charybdis between which no military pilot can steer. To this the code of penal enactments is a subordinate consideration, to which therefore, whether judiciously regulated or otherwise, we need not pay much attention. The general formation presents a group, as our friend W. would say, rather out of keeping with the landscape,—a mere body of heavy infantry, with a disproportionately small artillery, and no cavalry, to act in a country whose forests were made (to use a soldiers idea) for riflemen, and whose coasts and necessities of a rapid communication would occassion ample service for the other arms.

'Exercise has visibly degenerated into a mere mustre; the absence of intelligence in officers is not here compensated by habitual practice in the men; all alike need instruction; and the moment for its acquirement is alike curtailed to all. How then can the zeal, the energy of a few individuals be supposed to work what might well be deemed a miracle?

'The Halifax artillery companies and the flankers of the same regiments are tolerably complete in their equipments: the remaining corps are miserably deficient, whether in arms, accoutrements, or clothing. In most of the districts, the Government firelocks have been called in from the possession of those to whom they were issued during the war, and are now lying useless and almost unheeded in the stores or depots.

The provincial statute which issued a firelock to each militia man, and at the same time prohibits him from using it in the woods, is much on a par with the sagacity of the schoolmistress who dismissed her children with a lump of barley sugar to each, which he was forbidden to suck till after school hours on the following day. What if a few thousand firelocks do wear out in ten years in place of fifteen; are they issued with the intention of being kept like china tea cups, to look pretty over the fireplace of the cottager? Does not, on the contrary, the user of this weapon, while pursuing his own sport, assist, at a trifling expense, in the construction of the most powerful machine for defence that can be wielded by the hands of a free government? The deprivation of the arms issued has been one means of leading the people to consider the militia inspections as mere occasions of annoyance;* and those who now express the most repugnance on being called out to attend the muster of a mere rabble, are equally explicit in declaring their willingness to conform to such measures as would ensure greater efficiency.

It is generally the fashion throughout every part of the country, to laugh at the Militia; an officer's rank therein, if mentioned, is always announced with a smile, as though he were a deserter from Sir John Falstaff's corps, or a recruit on furlough from that elite troop, the Horse Marines. I cannot at all concede the reasonableness of this feeling, and would joyfully hail the amendment of militia laws, which is necessary as the first step towards its eradication.

It appears to me as though a strange fatality were permitted to cloud our view, when regarding the national force of these provinces. Whence arises this supineness, this almost Indian absence of foresight? Is it from the improbability of our collision with an active, enterprising, and envious neighbour, whose view from the back windows of his mansion is cramped, and whose premises are overlooked and confined, by our rudely-constructed outhouses? Is it that a vast line of coast peculiarly unfavourable for permanent maritime defence, and a frontier purely artificial, extending along two degrees and a half of latitude, (that of New-Brunswick,) are considered secure from the insult of an adversary whose forces might be concentrated within thirty-six hours' sail? Look at our very neighbours themselves; observe that young giant of our own rearing, whose perseverance taught our fathers to respect, and whose active progress must force us to admire him;—do the Americans consider their militia a mere bugbear? Is it with this idea that private seminaries and schools, both large and small, are establishing themselves for the education of the rising generation throughout the states, upon military principles, and under the conduct of retired military officers?* Is it in the conviction of its inutility, that such care is manifested by the public authorities for the encouragement of a defensive system, —that the choicest arms at the disposal of the Government, are bestowed as rewards to perpetuate the memory of successful opposition,‡ and the palm of expertness in the use of national weapon sedulously regarded as the highest honour of him who bears it? These measures are surely the result of a conviction of the vital importance of a national organized force, and its nature is justly dictated by local peculiarities and by the all powerful facts of former experience.

*On my arrival at a hotel in the neighbourhood of Niagara, in the summer of 1827, I was surprised to find the house occupied by a corps of fine boys apparently from fourteen to eighteen years of age, clothed in a plain uniform, and in number about 150. Their firelocks were piled in the bedroom passages and sentries regularly planted over them. I was informed that they were the pupils belonging to a private academy on the Connecticut River, and that, although not intended particularly for the military profession, their school was conducted on military principles, and they marched for a certain period every summer. They were at this time, 300 miles from the academy. I believe there are several private institutions springing up on this mode in different States of the Union. The National College for the instruction of young men distined for commissions in the regular army, is at West point on the River Hudson.

‡At Plattsburg, in 1827, I was present at the inspection of a beautiful Tirailleur battallion of militia, whose rifles were presented to them in commemoration of the affair at that place.

A LAPLAND WEDDING.—It is death in Lapland to marry a maid without her parents' or friends consent; therefore, if one bear affection to a young maid, upon breaking thereof to her friends, the fashion is that a day is appointed for their friends, to meet to behold the two young parties run a race together. The maid is allowed in starting the advantage of a third part in the race, so that it is impossible, except she will of herself, that she should be overtaken.

If the maid overrun her suitor, the matter is ended; he must never have her, it being penal for the man to renew the offer of marriage. But if the virgin has affection for him, though at first running hard to try the truth of her love, she will (without Atalanta's golden balls to retard her speed) pretend some casualty, and a voluntary halt, before she cometh to make an end of the race. Thus none are compelled to marry against their own wills; and this is the cause that in this poor country the married people are richer in their own contentment than in other lands, where so many forced matches make feigned love, and causes real unhappiness.

ANECDOTE.—The Philadelphia Inquirer publishes the following anecdote, related by a friend and contemporary of the lamented Dr. Godman:

"Some years ago, in conversation with us, he said that in a voyage to sea in early life, he had seen a lad who had just begun to be a sailor, going out to some projecting part of the rigging. His arms were supported by a spar, and he was looking below him for a rope which ran across, on which his feet should be. The rope flew from side to side, and it was evident that the poor fellow was becoming dizzy, and in danger of falling, when the mate shouted to him with all his force, 'LOOK ALOFT! you sneaking lubber!' By thus turning away his eyes from the danger, his dizziness was prevented, and he found his footing. And this accident, the Doctor said, often recurred to his mind in after life, when his troubles grew heavy upon him, and he could hardly find ground whereon to tread. At such times he heard the mate's shout in his ears, and turned his eyes 'aloft' to the prize upon which he had fastened his hopes. We cannot part with this beautiful illustration, without asking each of our readers to apply it to still a nobler purpose: to steady themselves in all the tempests of adversity by looking towards that life in which there is rest and peace evermore—and when our flesh and heart shall fail us, and we can find no support under our feet, to seek it by 'looking aloft' to HIM, "who is the strength of our hearts, and our portion forever."

A SAILOR'S EPITAPH.—The child of the ocean; I was cradled by its tumbling billows; the nestling of the tempest; the winter storms howled my lullaby; educated with the sons of Neptune; the gun-deck was my school room, and the masts and yards my gymnasium poles, trained to deeds of dreadful daring, my country's command was the fiat of justice; the bugle and the battle cry were the summons to glory—and victory the height of my ambition; but strained by hard service; decayed, and somewhat worm-eaten, I have taken my last departure; arrived safe in the last harbour—and moored head and stern, for the last time, forever; here I shall remain, under the care of an able ship's husband, till the resurrection gun disturbs my long quiet, and the trumpet of heaven calls all hands to quarters.

FISH STORY.—One Captain Kotzebue, a Russian naval officer who has been round the world on a voyage of discovery, gives the following attempt at the indiscribable:—

"On the 1st of June, 1824, being opposite to the coast of Japan, we observed a red stripe on the surface of the water which was about a fathom in width, and full five miles in length. As we crossed it, we fished up a tubful, and found that the colour proceeded from an infinite number of dwarf crabs, which could scarcely be detected by the naked eye."

On Sunday evening, the Daniel O'Connell, from St. John, (N. B) was towed up the Bay to Sligo, and was greeted by the cheers of the populace. Several other vessels, now lying at the quay, are distinguished by names, which render their juxta-position rather odd in the nautical nomenclature. We have, for instance, the William Pitt, the Duke of Wellington, and the Britannia. By one of these fortuitous circumstances which sometimes afford an opportunity for the display of native wit, the Daniel O'Connell was run in between the Britannia and the quay, from which the latter was forced to recede a little. A wag, on remarking this, exclaimed that the Union was dissolved!—Sligo Observer.

An Irish labourer, who witnessed the experiments on our rail road when the carriages were flying at the rate of twenty miles an hour, exclaimed, "By the powers, but this is the real way for a man to get on in the world!"

On Saturday night some person broke into the watchhouse at Grantham, and stole from the guardian of the night his lanthorn and liquor bottle.

Sound snores the guardian of the night,
The hour uncalled—babes sleep not sweeter;
I thought he was a watch. You're right,
He's a stop-watch, not a repeater.

The will of the late Mr. Wheatstone, solicitor, of Chancery Lane, commences in the following singular manner, more particularly considering the testator was of a profession not often addicted to court the muses:—

"As to all my worldly goods now or to be in store,
I give to my beloved wife and her's for evermore;
I give all freely!—I no limit fix!
This is my Will, and she's Executrix."

MILITARY.—"Fellow Ossifers and Gentlemen Sogers," said a Connecticut Jonathan, who had just been appointed to the honorable station of corporal in a company of militia invincibles. "I'm tarnally obliged to ye, by gaily, for 'pointing me a korperal for I'll be darn'd to darnashun if I can't cut out Jo Gawky now, and git Poll Higgins, in spite of broomsticks and punkins."

Cold sleigh rides with Yankee lasses—
Good fat pork with sweet molasses!
Inguns, punkin pies, shall Pool,
And bake beans, eat with the Corporoll?
Rum te um, tiddle, didy, oo!
Yankee doodle, doodle doo! Am. Paper.
