POETRY.

(FOR THE COURIER.)

MR. EDITOR,—I do not know whether it is common for Ladies to write for a Newspaper; but when the temptation is strong, I think they are at least pardonable if they do. The following lines are a faint sketch of one of the most interesting scenes I ever witnessed; and as they exhibit some of those amiable feelings which do the greatest honor to the female character, I confess I am urged by something more than an author's vanity, to send them to you. I must tell you, at the same time, that there is not the least impropriety in my doing so, since it is not possible that any more than one, besides myself, should know who is meant.

TO A LADY.

MAIDEN! why that strong affection?
Is it not a little wild?
Do you see so great perfection,
In that charming little child?

O, but then, the voice of Nature,
Speaking in thy tender breast,
Bids thee love that little creature,
Though in poverty 'tis drest.

Maiden! does the Infant know thee?
'Oh, if it would only speak!'
'Tis so alter'd since it saw thee—
See how pale its sickly cheek.

All you taught it is forgotten,
Since it lost thy wonted care;
Rude the dress it now is clothed in,
Rudely hangs its tender hair.

Why so fondly do you press it,
Asking questions asked before?
Why so anxious how to bless it?
Oh, you meet perhaps no more!

Maiden! if rude inattention,
Rob this Infant of its life—
If those woes it cannot mention,
End its little feeble strife—

O, then, Maiden, tender hearted,
Would you feel another's woe?
Thinking on the hour you parted,
Would the tear of pity flow?

O, but cease that tender weeping;
Be not by those fears oppressed;
Softly now the Infant sleeping,
Dreams it feels a Mother's breast.

St. John, Dec. 13, 1830. ELIZABETH.

CHRISTMAS TIMES.

A VISIT FROM ST. NICHOLAS OR SANTA CLAUS.

'Twas the night before Christmas, when all thro' the house
Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse,
The stockings were hung by the chimney with care,
In hopes that St. Nicholas soon would be there.
The children were posted all snug in their beds,
While visions of sugar plums danced in their heads,
And Mamma in her kerchief, and I in my cap,
Had just settled our brains for a long winter's nap:
When out of the lawn there arose such a clatter,
I sprang from the bed to see what was the matter.
Away to the window I flew like a flash,
To open the shutters, and throw up the sash.
The moon on the breast of the new-fallen snow,
Gave the lustre of mid-day to objects below.
When, what to my wondering eyes should appear,
But a minature sleigh and eight tiny rein-deer,
With a little old driver, so lively and quick,
I knew in a moment it must be St. Nick.
More rapid than eagles his coursers they came,
And he whistled, and shouted, and call'd them by name:
'Now Danter! now, Dancer! now, Prancer! now, Vixen!
On! Comet, on! Cupid, on! Dunder and Blixen;
To the top of the Porch! to the top of the wall!"
As dry leaves before the wild hurricane fly,
When they meet with an obstacle, mount to the sky:
So up to the house-top the coursers they flew,
With the sleigh full of toys—and St. Nicholas too.
And then in a twinkling, I heard on the roof,
The prancing and pawing of each little hoof:
And I drew in my head, and was turning around,
Down the chimney St. Nicholas came with a bound.
He was dressed all in fur from his head to his foot,
And his clothes were all tarnished with ashes and soot;
A bundle of toys was flung on his back,
And he look'd like a pedlar just opening his pack:
His eyes—how they twinkled! his dimples how merry,
His cheeks were like roses, his nose like a cherry;
His droll little mouth was drawn up like a bow,
And the beard of his chin was as white as the snow,
The stump of a pipe he held tight in his teeth,
And the smoke it encircled his head like a wreath.
He had a broad face and a little round belly,
That shook when he laughed, like a bowl full of jelly.
He was chubby and plump, a right jolly old elf,
And I laugh'd when I saw him, in spite of myself.
A wink of his eye and a twist of his head,
Soon gave me to know I had nothing to dread;
He spoke not a word, but went straight to his work,
And fill'd all his stockings: then turn'd with a jerk.
And laying his finger aside of his nose,
And giving a nod, up the chimney he rose.
He sprang to his sleigh, to his team gave a whistle,
And away they all flew like the down of a thistle,
But I heard him exclaim, ere he drove out of sight,
'Happy Christmas to all, and to all a good night."

MISCELLANY.

[From the London Spectator.]

THE IRON AGE.

Our grandfathers sang a glee, beginning—
"If a man were secure
That his life would endure
To a thousand long years"

and continuing to imagine the prodigious works he would on such conditions of vitality undertake and accomplish, "and all without trouble or care." There was great wisdom in desiring an extension of life proportionate to the magnitude of designs, for surely it is felt to be a sad thing to be aged in the age of improvements. The middle-aged gentry are just now placed at pitiable disadvantage—we are in what the French call a "false position." Precisely when the world is taking its great start, we are entering on the worse moiety of life, and bidding adieu to the season of activity and enterprise. What victory of our time is to be compared with the conquest of space which is now in process. We sicken with envy of posterity, when we think of the Manchester and Liverpool Railway, with its quiet little beginning of thirty miles an hour. How mortifying to consider that we have been cast in the world thirty years before the age of convenience, and to remember the journies we have jolted at the rate of six, seven, and eight miles an hour, and the pleasures and conveniences which distances have denied us—distances! our children will ask what the word means. The ancients surely had a glimpse of these things, and Medea's caldron of renovation was the boiler of a steam engine. By being put in that pot, the world is made young again. What a codger was the world before yesterday!—what ways, what gait, what carriage, what clumsiness, what fallacies, what ignorance, what humdrum habits, what abject ideas, and shabby content! A dozen years ago, the boast was of mail-coaches and canals—the Goths! The world will henceforward skate with the wind's speed on iron; and as for the canals, they will only be good for filling boilers. Who will talk of horse-racing now? who will match mettle against metal? who will back blood against the boilers? A wagon may have the odds against the St. Leger field. But even now, we are doubtless in our infancy—the world is only just learning to walk, just putting forth its feeble and unassured legs at the rate of thirty miles an hour—wretched going, our children will say; incredible drawling, our grandsons will exclaim. The Land's End and John o' Groat's house will be short drives, and the journey from Paris to Rome a morning's excursion; the Grand Tour, to travel round the world through both Poles. Again we repeat, it is mortally mortifying to think of quitting the world when these improvements are in process, and opening their triumphs and conveniences to our admiring, expecting, and longing eyes. Best to be young, but better to be old than middle-aged, which is now the tantalizing position. The old have lost the spring of activity, and may console themselves with the privilege of exaggerating the past system, so dear to senility. They may laud the age of stately movements, cocked hats, swords and periwigs, and the talk of Ranelagh as yet theirs. They too may fib and crack, and set forth the passages and exploits of their youth, without fear of contradiction or correction. But the middle-aged lack even these poor consolations. The witnesses are too numerous, and the realities too adjacent. We are unlucky borderers, who have passed our best days on the worst side of things. We have drunk port-wine and spent a day in journeying (what a word! will it be understood next week?) between London and Brighton; we have dined in a coffee house; we have talked of the Catholic question; we have sailed on contrary winds in packets; and been acquainted with diligences of nine inside. And even now when we are crossing the line of age to the wrong side, the world is but advancing to its years of discretion. It is only in its nonage, and it will come to manhood in its twenty-first century. It is now but in its teens of greenness. One inconvenience we anticipate for posterity, and that it will be the smallness of the globe when railing and steaming are perfected. It will be found not large enough for exercise. The deserts of Arabia may be made a ring, a Hyde Park for airing; but the people will complain of confinement, and fly to the suburbs in America, and about the Poles which will be warmed with stoves. The conquest of space will thus end, as of old, in discontent, and the Alexanders of mechanics will weep for other worlds to overrun.

WINTER.—Hast thou come again—our old—our good, old, kind hearted friend of lang syne? Well—old gentleman, here is a hand for thee to shake, and we greet the lovingly with right good will. Blessings on that frosty head and blue nose of thine! they are the same as when we hailed them welcome in the days of our boyhood. Aye, Winter was Winter then—and the light of thy venerable countenance carried joy to every heart.

They say thou art growing melancholy old neighbour—that thine eyes overflow with rheum, and that thy hand is freezing cold. Shame on them! Those are tears of joy; and, if thy hand smacks somewhat of the icicle, let thine enemies shake it till their blood tingles again in their veins. Melancholy!—thou art the veriest wag of the whole family—the grand marshall of fun and frolic—the annointed prince of light hearts and heels. Melancholy! Bacchus was a Dutchman to thee. Cold!—let them build a fire for thee—thou art not such a fool as to laugh without a fire. Let them welcome thee—an old fashioned wit—in the old fashioned way—and, our word for it, the very roof-tree will shake with thy good-natured mirth. Cold! Pile on the wood—bring forth the ruddy tankard of October—the fragrant basket of Greenings—the broad bowl of shagbarks—and see if Summer, in all her glory, can dispense life and heat like thee. See if even the miser's heart does not begin to warm at thy approach. Draw out the fiddle! Marshall your ranks—young and old—fathers, mothers, aunts, and cousins—the whole of you! Now—one, two, three!—There!—is it a cold, melancholy, rheumatic old cynic, that sets such lively spirits in motion?—No, our old friend!—It is too common that benefactors are belied—and they belie thee most foully—they do indeed. Would that thy detractors could boast of garments as spotless, and hearts as free and warm at thine.

Come, thou dweller in the stormy caves of the North! Come from thy mountain home! Glad hearts are waiting to hear thy hoarse voice in the sky. Touch the hills! Spread thy mantle in the valleys! The merry bells are impatient to ring forth the joys of thy appearing. The virgin has prepared the best room—and her heart sets lightly on its throne—for thou hast promised her a lover at thy coming. Speak to the waters!—The skater's shout shall answer thee, as his iron heel thrills along the glittering chrystal. Breathe on the forest boughs! The twigs become networks of burnished silver sprinkled with diamonds. Spring has wrought no enchantment so beautiful as thine. The architect gazes with awe upon the temples thou has builded in the Northern Seas—and the lover of beauty stops to admire thy cunning work where thou art busy with the snow wreath. Come, thou harbinger of the dance and song—we love thy hoary locks, for they mind us of youth, and love, and joy. It is meet they should be reverenced, for thou bearest age without austerity, and art venerable without being unsocial or unhappy.—N. E. Review.

PUBLIC SPIRIT.

And what is the Public Spirit? I use the definition of one who wrote more than a hundred years ago. It is a combination of every laudable passion, and takes in parents, kindred, friends, neighbors, and every thing dear to mankind. It is the highest virtue and embraces almost all the other—stedfastness to good purposes—fidelity to one's trust—resolution in difficulties—defiance of danger contempt of death—impartial and active benevolence to all mankind. The office of Public Spirit is to combat fraud and delusion—to reconcile the governor and the governed—to expose imposture—to resist oppression. It fills the country where it operates with industrious and happy laborers, and the town with intrepid and useful citizens and maintains the whole in liberty, plenty, ease and security. Public Spirit is a passion to promote universal good, even at the hazard of personal pain, loss, and privation. It is one man's care for many, and the concern of every man for all.—Buckingham's Address.

Paying for Punctilio.—The late General Barber, of the Royal Irish Artillery, was an excellent Officer, a strict disciplinarian, and most punctilious in every thing relating to his military duties. He had a regular form of addressing him when any of the men had a request to make, such as for a Furlough or Pass, &c. The form was three regular taps upon the door, three steps into the room, then to the right about, three steps back, then shut the door and advance. One morning a private came to request a Furlough; his manner of entrance did not please the General, who was just sitting down to breakfast; and he desired the man to act the General, whilst he taught him how a private should enter the room. Down sat the soldier; and determined to fulfil the order to the letter, he commenced a vigorous attack on the good things within his reach. Tea, toasts, and ham, vanished with almost miraculous quickness, while the General marched to the outside of the door—the three taps were given with marked precision, and "come in" pronounced by a mouth crammed with toast—the three steps made, the door shut, and the salute given—the soldier quite at home. Questions of the latter precisely of the kind put on these occasions by the General, gave ample time to conclude the repast; and on the closing answer, "Well my lad, you shall have your Furlough, "the—General resumed his seat at an empty table; however, he highly enjoyed the assurance of the man, who not only gained his Furlough, but the best breakfast he had ever made.

The glorious Militia.—A militia company, in Gloucester, Mass. which used to muster 100 men lately turned out for drill; present the captain, orderly, and one private—total 3. This reminds us of the observation of a militia captain, who had but one soldier in his company. He said he could get along very well with most of the evolutions—but there was one which he found it very difficult to execute—"and that is," said he, "when I give the word of command for the rear rank to take distance—it is like parting soul from body."—N. Y. Constellation.

Propagation of Sound.—Captain Parry, in his Third Voyage, p. 58, relates that a conversation could be distinctly carried on at Port Bowen, at the distance of 6,696 ft. Dr. Clarke, however, mentions a more extraordinary instance of propagation of sound. He asserts, vol. ii. p. 331, that while sailing from the Gulf of Clancus to Alexandria, the firing of the English, in attacking the fortress of Rachmanie, upon the Nile, was distinctly heard by all on board, a distance of one hundred and thirty miles.

Sleep has often been mentioned as the image of death. Their resemblance is indeed striking and apparent; they both when they seize the body, leave the soul at liberty, and wise is he that remembers of both, that they can be made safe and happy only by virtue,

Thistlewood.—This man so notorious in the annals of crime in Great Britain, had a son who took a most prominent part in the French revolution. He led on a body of the people against the Swiss Guards. Thus, under the same predominating influence spring up both error and desert.—Charles-
