POETRY.

PRESENTIMENT OF DEATH.

BY JOHN MALCOLM.

THE sense of death ere we depart,
The drear forbode before we die,
The solemn signal at the heart,—
How dread the mystery!

It comes, eclipsing pleasure's beams,
A shadow from the future cast;
'Tis secret in its source as dreams,
And traceless as the blast.

It comes! the dark mysterious mood,
The prophet-spirit shades the mind,
Which trembles, as autumnal wood,
"That shakes without a wind."

It breaks on pleasure's rosy bower
When hope's accomplishment is near;
And in the very bridal hour
Oft wispers of the bier.

On battle-eves I've marked it rife,
And heard it mocked as vision vain;
But he who owned it, from the strife
Never returned again.

Whence is this drear revealment given,
Ere ebbs away life's parting sand?
Say, sighs it on the winds of heaven,
Far from the spirits' land?

The doom predestined men forbode
Breathes not from aught beneath the sky;
The dark communion is with God—
The warning from on high.

[From the Dumfries and Galloway Caurier.]

THE YOUNG MOTHER,

TO HER FIRST-BORN.

MY sweet wee nursling! thou art sweet to me,
As sun to flowers, or honey to the bee!
Music in summer bowers, the freshening stream
To bright wings dipping from the sultry beam!
Hope to the mourner, to the weary rest,
To the young dreamer, visions of the blest!
What art thou like? nestling in slumbers there,
So meek, so calm, so innocently fair!
What art thou like? a dormouse, sleek and warm?
A primrose cluster? or a fairy charm?
Yes, thou'rt a charm, a most mysterious spell!
Birds, bees, and flowers, can just as ably tell [be,
Why sunshine, scent, and streams, their pleasures
As thy young mother why she doats on thee,
With such unmeasur'd, fond intensity;—
I cannot look on thee, but springing thought
Perfumes the air with blossoms fancy-fraught!
I cannot think on thee, but life seems bright
With gushing sunbeams, ever-new delight!
Thou darling simpleton! thy vacant eye
Can yet, to my long gaze, make no reply!
Breathing and crying are thy only speech—
But oh, for me what eloquence has each!
Sounds of my first-born! how my heart they thrill!
Like the sweet bubblings of a hidden rill;—
A well of future blessedness art thou
My morning star—my crown of gladness now!

MISCELLANY.

NOVEMBER.—It has been fashionable to stigmatize this month as "the saddest of the year,"—a season of gloom and frost—a time for suicide and the blue-devils. 'Tis a villainous abuse of one of the cleverest of the twelve sisters. True—November has not the light, airy, beauty of May, nor the softness and voluptuous charm of June—but there is an honest and familiar frankness in her coming, which renders her, uncouth and rude as she may be—an agreeable visitant. She is like the buxom fair one of the bygone times of our grandmothers—with her tresses unadorned and with a homely garb, but with a kindly spirit and a warm heart.

November is after all a pleasant season. What if the flowers are dying, one after another, as the frost like a vegetable pestilence, passes over them? What if the leaves do wither, and wear for a time the yellow and sickly hue of decay, and then fall, with every breathing of the wind, like wearied birds stricken down from their resting-place?—What if a change does come over the things which we have loved; when we know that it is this change—this shifting aspect of the seasons—this variety of nature which makes the world so beautiful and beloved? If flower and leaf and herbage, and all the glorious things of summer are departing—there are other joys and other scenes in perspective. There are the gatherings around the household fire—the long and pleasant evenings—the song—the merriment—the glad Thanksgiving—the Christmas Ball! Then too, the long bright evenings of approaching Winter—when the Earth is white with the beautiful vestment of snow—when the whole heaven is brilliant with stars—and the clear moonlight casts the still shadows of the skeleton trees upon the white lustre which surrounds them. Who, at such a time does not love the sleigh ride—the merry sleigh ride? Who has not gazed until his eyes ached with the magnificence of the scene, upon the frost-work of winter—when the fine, misty rain has become frozen upon every visible object? Summer has nothing to compare with the simple scenery of winter, when

> "The frost performs its silent ministry, > Unhelped by any wind,"—

when every blade of grass and every twig flashes like a living diamond—when every tree rises like a tall column of silver, and the branches, long, tapering, and leafless, glow like the jewellery which lightened on the eye of Aladdin in the cave of the Enchanter.

The glory of the summer has gone by—the beautiful greenness has become withered and dead. Were this all—were there no associations of moral desolation—of faded hopes—of hearts withering in the bosom of the living—connected with the decaying scenery around us, we would not indulge in a moment's melancholy. The season of flowers will come again—the streams will flow gracefully and lightly as before—the trees will again toss their cumbrous load of greenness to the sunlight—and by mossy stone and winding rivulet, the young blossoms will start up, as at the bidding of their fairy guardians. But the human heart has no change like that of Nature. It has no second spring-time. Once blighted in its hour of freshness, it wears forever after the mark of the spoiler. The dews of affection may fall, and the gentle rain of sympathy be lavished upon it—but the sere root of blighted feeling will never again waken into life, nor the crushed flowers of hope blossom with their wonted beauty.—Hartford Review.

FOREST TREES.—All classes envy the farmer. He has no vicissitudes but those of the seasons. Labor makes him healthful, and health renders him cheerful. All his excitements are gentle, and he seldom feels the rousing but unquiet impulse of ambition. The green earth is his patrimony, and he dresses it like a garden,—he does not open its recesses for the precious minerals, or the materials to carry on wars—he turns up its surface to scatter the seed that makes the summer glorious in blossoms, and the autumn fruitful in 'corn, wine and oil.' There is now, as to the product of the earth, no fancied Canaan: it is in the hand of every one who will till the earth, to acquire a blessed spot in his own land of promise. The wilderness is before him, and he can make it blossom like the rose.

The season has now come, but it is passing rapidly away, when all plants and trees may be safely removed, or transplanted.—To transplant often in Spring, is to check their growth—and it is also appropriating time that is called for elsewhere on the great revival of vegetation. It is generally admitted, that trees transplanted in autumn suffer less from the removal. Our countrymen, have certainly too little favour towards a tree—the most glorious of all inanimate objects—and without reference to fruit and ornament, which should never be separated from a mansion house. In other countries, the grove is planted with care, before the house is reared, but here, the axe is laid to the root of the tree, as if it cumbered the ground that it should be preserved to shade. There seems to be a national peculiarity in us, to preserve, at any sacrifice of forest, the prospect; yet it is doubtful whether the effect of a distant prospect is not increased by seeing it through vistas and glimpses. We hope for better practice, when the various noble trees that our forests produce, and which are cultivated in Europe as the greatest ornaments of the garden, shall be suffered to wave their branches in the vicinity of our dwellings.—Boston Pall.

Theatrical Anecdote.—The following anecdote of a manager is extremely well told, and as Mr. Bernard says, well illustrates how skilfully a man of talent may combine the duties of actor and manager:—"It was his general practice to take the money at the pit-door, another actor officiating at the boxes. One evening, when committing a dramatic homicide on Richard, the half price was coming in. Never in the sublimest of his histrionic illusions, was he altogether so enveloped in Shakespeare that he forgot himself. His vigilant right eye was cocked upon the pit entrance, to see that his substitute fulfilled his duty, or that the unprincipled bumpkins of the village did not confound their individuality and pass in in a group. He had concluded the soliloquy in the tent scene, and, rousing at the words of Catesby, had repeated the line, 'Shadows avaunt! you threaten here in vain!' when he suddenly espied a malefactor stealing in unobserved. The interest of Richard's situation was instantly forgotten in his own; substance as well as shadows departed, and, with a distinguishing gesticulation, he exclaimed, 'That man in the grey coat came in without paying!" He then subjoined, with a burst of truly rational triumph, 'Richard's himself again!' —Bernard's Retrospections of the Stage.

Lord Erskine, at the period he was most anxious for reform, cut down a large magnolia which overshadowed his dining room, thinking it would shoot up again from the roots. Mr. Cox, who was at dinner with his lordship, and missed his favorite tree, made the following impromptu:—

> Eager for reform, in country as in town,
> Lo! Erskine's cut his tall magnolia down,
> If cool reflection comes not to his aid,
> He'll lose the substance, as he's lost the shade.

POLIGNAC.—About two years since, Polignac, who was then the French Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, was passing in the packet-boat from Dover to Calais. Whilst walking the deck, he observed a wretched being of a fellow-countryman on board. 'I remember you,' said Polignac, 'where did I first become acquainted with you?' 'You saw me,' was the man's reply, 'in a house of recovery at Paris, to which Napoleon had consigned you after he had pardoned you; in that house, you will recollect, you were a prisoner on parole, but afterwards made your escape; and you will please to remember too, that I won three small crown pieces of you over a bottle; you were unable to pay me, and are still in my debt for them.' Polignac turned away from the man, not a little disconcerted at his impudence, and shortly sent the fellow three louis by the hands of his valet; but his creditor returned the fifty one francs of change to him. This individual was a strolling player, and is said to be the person who recognised Polignac at Granville, on the morning of the 16th ult.

His Majesty on visiting the gardens of Hampton Court was received by the head gardener, who alighted from his carriage. "Mr.——," said the King, "I do not wish to see you in your carriage; a plain buggy will do as well. You are head gardener at Windsor and other places; too much to do: you must resign Hampton gardens; others should share; too many places for one gardener to hold." The situation is between four and five hundred a year. This pluralist of cabbages, &c. will lose a portion of his celery, and Royal benevolence will be extended.—Age.

LIBERTY AND DIVORCE.—The reading of the following unique petition in the French Chamber of Deputies, last week, excited much merriment:—'Deputies.—You would only accomplish the half of your task if you did not re-establish divorce.—(A loud laugh.) Liberty without divorce is a mere word.—(Roars of laughter.) You would have liberty without, slavery within, and a wicked and scolding wife.—(Renewed laughter.) A rich man can free himself of an abominable tie; mediocrity alone must remain in torture. I request you will take the law of divorce into consideration.—Your servant,

BARBIER.'

HESSE CASSEL.—The mode adopted in this little principality, to prevent confusion, is a lesson to kings and revolutionists. On the return of the elector from his late visit to Carlsbad, the magistrates in a body waited on his serenity, laid their grievances before him, and assured him that they would not answer for the peace of the city, if their prayers were rejected, so great was the agitation which prevailed. In a quarter of an hour the magistrates with the deputies of the citizens, were admitted, and soon afterwards they showed themselves to the windows, waving white handkerchiefs. This was the signal agreed upon to announce the Elector's assent to their petitions—as black gloves were to have indicated his refusal of them. A long continued huzza from the countless multitude ensued, till the elector and the prince came to the balcony, and were received with shouts of acclamation, which they returned by saluting the people in a most gracious manner. The prince returned to his palace on foot, and was warmly greeted by the multitude, as were also Count Hassenheim and M. Schomberg. The whole city was full of rejoicing, for all had desired a change in the system of government; and in truth things were come to such an extremity, that nothing could reasonably be done, but to yield. On the evening of the 15th the city was illuminated.

The French sawyers in Paris put one end of their saw upon the ground, and the other against their breast. They then take up a stick of wood in their hands and move it across the saw, until it is divided. In vain has an American repeatedly attempted to teach them the use of a wooden horse in sawing; they have only laughed at him; and because none of their sticks are large, have preferred to follow the custom of their fathers.
