SONG OF WINTER.

I come !
My steeds are waiting, flying clouds attend—
I know no difference—enemy and friend
To me, are equal; heard ye not my voice,
In the shrill whistle of the shreaking wind,
Screaming around your walls, a course to find ?
My sons are playing tempests—they rejoice ;
I come.

I come !
Draw nearer friend to friend;
Enclose your walls around you; homeward wend,
Comfort the lonely : I would lay you low,
And freeze your very vitals; I would scream
With frantic joy, to view me by the gleam
Of your home's blazing—list—the storm and snow,
I come.

I come, I come,
My own heart's brother—death
Attends me in my mission; for my breath
Though dread is transient, and a pestilence
Is 'round him girded; years by thousands hence
Your graves shall meet my fury, but your rest
Shall know no waking, hark ! on Ocean's breast,
On vallies fair, and mountain Eagle's nest,
I come.

I come ! I come !
The sparkling river shrinks,
Within my icy arms; or shivering sinks
Beneath my snowy mantle. Yonder hill
So bright and beautiful, in summer's hour
Ah—would you seek its green recesses, still
Beware ! beware ! I rest in beauty's bower.
O tempt me not—hush—Death is near—be still—
I come.

TIME.

BY SIR WALTER SCOTT.

" Why sittest thou by that ruined wall,
Thou aged carl so stern and gray ?
Dost thou its former pride recall,
Or ponder how it pass'd away ?"
" Know'st thou not me ?" the Deep Voice cried ;
" So long enjoyed, so oft misused—
Alternate in thy fickle pride,
Desired, neglected, and accused ?

Before my breath like blazing flax,
Man and his marvels pass away ;
And changing empires wane and wax,
Are founded, flourish, and decay.
Redeem thine hours—the space is brief—
While in my glass the sand-grains shiver,
And measureless thy joy or grief,
When TIME and thou shalt part forever.

EPIGRAM.

It rained a deluge; Joseph reached home late;
The bell long tugged; at last, popped out a pate;
" Who's that there ringing now !" squalls sleepy Bet;
" 'Tis I, you jade," says he, " I'm wringing wet."

MISCELLANY.

EXTRAORDINARY ANECDOTE.

Lord D— and his Wife.

This surprising story we take from the Memoirs of the late Sir James Edward Smith, M. D, F. R. S.

The Rev. John Kinderley's connexion with Scotland had procured him the acquaintance of several families in the north, among whom Lord D— was one of his most intimate friends. This nobleman had met with a lady at Bath, both young and attractive, and who passed for the widow of an officer. His Lordship becoming attached to this lady, he married her, and they soon after left England to reside on the Continent. Here, after a few years, she was seized with an alarming illness, and earnestly desired her lord, in case of her death, that she might be conveyed to England, and interred in a particular church, which she named. Upon this event taking place, Lord D— accompanied the body in the same ship, and, upon landing at Harwich, the chest in which the remains of his lady were enclosed excited the suspicions of the custom-house officers, who insisted upon ascertaining its contents. Being a good deal shocked at such a threat, Lord D— proposed that it should be removed to the church, and opened in the presence of the clergyman of the parish, who could vouch for its containing what he assured them was within. Accordingly the proposal was yielded to, and the body conveyed to the appointed place, when upon opening the chest, the attending minister recognized in the features of the deceased, his own wife ! and communicated the unwelcome discovery to lord D—on the spot. It appeared upon further conversation, that Lady D— had been married against her inclination to this person, and determining to separate entirely from him, had gone he knew not whither, and under an assumed name and character had become the wife of Lord D—. The two husbands followed her remains to the grave the next day ; and on the same evening, Lord D—, in great distress of mind, attended by one servant, came to his friend's house, in Norwich, for consolation. It was winter and about six o'clock when he arrived. Mr. Kinderly was called out to speak to a stranger, and returning to his wife, desired her to leave them together, pretending that a stranger from Scotland was arrived on particular business. Lord D— set up with Mr. Kinderley the whole night, to unbosom his afflictions and extraordinary fate to his friend ; and at day-break, in order to avoid any interview with his host's family, for which his spirits were unequal, he departed.

Literary Guzzlement.—Hume, Smith, and other literati of the last century, used to frequent a tavern in a low street in Edinburgh, called the Poterrow ; where, if their accommodations were not of the first order, they had at least no cause to complain of the scantiness of their fare. One day, as the landlady was bringing in a third supply of a particularly good dish, she thus addressed them:— " They ca' ye the literawti, I believe; od, if they were to ca' ye the eaterawti, they would be nearer the mark."

Only one spur.—Butler, in his Hudibras, said a great many witty, and some useful things ; his amusing discovery, that if one side of a horse be spurred, the other will keep up of its own accord, certainly evinces a knowledge of the habits of that animal, and may with propriety be applied to many other sorts of things upon which we may undertake to drive through the world.

T' be a Parliament Mon.—During a canvass of a Mr. Garrett among the electors of Salford, (Eng.) he and his friends called at a hucksters shop, in which was only a boy, who having learned their business, went to the foot of the stairs, and called to his mother, who was above, " Mother, here's a man, as wants yo't vote for him t' be a Parliament man." " Well," shouted his mother, " tell him thy feyther's not hame, but if he'll chalk his name on the counter, we'll inquire into his character.

Great Talkers.—Of all borrowers, your great talkers is the most insufferable; for he is continually saying to his neighbor " Lend me thine ears." He is likewise the most impudent, for he will frequently take your ears without so much as asking for the loan of them.

Neutralizing Medicines.—An apothecary in the country sent a lady three draughts, and on being asked what effect they were intended to produce, said, " The first, madam, is to warm you, the second to cool you, and the third to prevent the excessive effects of either."

Wild Ducks.—Mr. Cartwright, a celebrated English ornithologist, who lived long in a desolate region, computed the rate at which certain wild ducks flew, to be not less than ninety miles per hour. Spallanzani found, by actual experiment, that a swallow flew from Bologna to Modena, a distance of twenty miles, in the almost inconceivable time of two minutes—thus going at the rate of twelve hundred miles per hour.

London Gas Lights.—The gas which lights the English Metropolis, is calculated to consume 38,000 chaldrons of coal per annum; 65,000 lamps in shops, houses, &c. and 7,500 street lamps. In 1822 the gas pipes in and about London were above 1,000 miles in length. Gas lights of half an inch in diameter supply a light equal to 20 candles ; of one inch in diameter equal to 100; two inches, 420; three inches to 1,000.
