POETRY.

THE MOTHER'S GRAVE.

Bright, glorious flowers above it spring,
Beside it laughs a silvery wave—
The wild-bird droops his chainless wing,
And breathes sad music o'er that grave.
The twilight dew falls sweetest there,
The twilight shadows thickest steal,
And from that turf, love's hallow'd prayer
Is oftenest pour'd for "others' weal."

Nearer—yet nearer! mark'st thou not
A slight form 'mid the foliage deep—
As if the genius of the spot
Had linger'd, gentle watch to keep?
Hush! o'er the mother's lowly bed
The daughter weeps 'mid blight and wrong—
And hark! to the unconscious dead,
E'en now she breathes her soul in song:

My cherish'd mother! thy low tomb
To me is "memory's talisman" yet:
Its spell through ming'ed joy and gloom,
Hath bid me ne'er the dead forget.
I kneel beside it now in grief—
Though seeming by earth's mockeries blest:
I pray for pilgrimage most brief—
I pray to share thy dreamless rest.

The sunshine of my life is gone!
Though woo'd by pleasure, wealth my dower,
I feel in this false world alone,
'Mid glow and bloom, a wither'd flower.
My spirit revel'd once in light;
Love flash'd not from a clearer brow;
My being's woof seem'd all too bright—
Wo for the dark threads in it now!

Wo for the shadow on my heart—
I've torn the idol from its shrine!
The love that seem'd of life a part—
I've crush'd for aye its germs divine!
Still, oft for him, the once ador'd,
Mother, beside thy grave, I pray—
His touch hath snapt my heart's full chord,
Yet may no sorrow chill his way!

My sainted mother! years have pass'd
Since first on thy green bed I wept—
I'm bending o'er it now, the last
Of those who then sad vigil kept:
My sister deep in ocean lies,
And my proud brother—o'er his head
The banner of a strange clime flies,
The stranger's grateful tears are shed.

Yes—earth's fond ties are shatter'd all!
Though young, my heart is with the dead,
"I seem as one who treads a hall,
Whence light, and song, and love are fled:"
Mother! sweet mother, canst thou hear
My ceaseless pinings to be free?
Ask of the One thou'rt ever near,
To call this soul to Him and thee!

MISCELLANY.

A late British tourist, Mr. Finch, gives the following description of a remarkable pond in Sussex County, New Jersey:

"In the northern counties of New-Jersey are numerous marl pits, formed by the decay and dissolution of fresh-water shells. Some are of great extent. A very singular one in the vicinity of Marksborough is called the Snow Pond. I. Thompson, Esquire, politely went with me to view it. When seen at a distance, it appeared as if the ground was covered with drifts of snow although it was in the month of August. On arriving at the spot, I found it was caused by innumerable small white shells, which formed a border to a pond, 3 miles in circumference. The shells extended in many parts, a hundred yards from the shore, and a cove which extended a mile was completely filled with them. Towards the centre of the pond, the bank of shells declined in an unknown depth; many attempts had been made to fathom it, but without success. The shells are extremely minute, none of them more than three lines in diameter, and many one third of that size. They appear like grains of sand. The quantity amounts to many thousand tons. Recent shell fish of the same kind are no doubt living in the centre of the pond, but have not hitherto been noticed on the surface. No use is made of this immense deposit of shells, although a very pure carbonate of lime. A small dam thrown across one end of the pond was said to have been made by the beavers. There is more happiness in the world than people in general imagine! The inhabitants of these beautiful shells have enjoyed their mountain-lake from time immemorial—undisturbed by the ambition of man, they have lived and enjoyed tranquillity!"

Rapidity of Eating.—The witty author of "Men and Manners in America," in describing a dinner at a public house in New York, says:—"Around, I beheld the same scene of gulping and swallowing, as if for a wager, which my observations at breakfast had prepared me to expect. In my own neighbourhood there was no conversation. Each individual seemed to pitch-fork his food down his gullet, without the smallest attention to the wants of his neighbourhood. If you asked a gentleman to help you from any dish before him, he certainly complied, but in a manner that showed you had imposed on him a disagreeable office; and, instead of a slice, your plate generally returned loaded with a solid massive wedge of animal matter."

An Englishman, lately in Paris, a great amateur of lions, bears, tigers, and other ferocious animals, became acquainted with Monsieur Martin, and made frequent visits to this celebrated menagerie. Martin had occasion to leave Paris, and in his absence he contrived, by bribing the keeper, to obtain his permission to walk into the interior, and amuse himself by feeding the animals through the cages. The keeper who was busily employed in serving out the food, had forgotten to close the gate of the lion's den. The gentleman happening to turn round, was horror-struck at perceiving his Majesty of the forest, stretching himself with a particular degree of satisfaction within a few yards of him. Surrounded by a high wall, without arms, stick, or even an umbrella to defend himself, his situation was no enviable one. A lucky idea struck him—he had his snuff-box in his hand, and threw the contents into the lion's face, who, in the most obliging manner, turned round to sneeze, giving the gentleman an opportunity of slipping into the den and closing the gate upon himself, remaining there until the keeper returned and released him.

I recollect an anecdote (says Sir John Herschell, in his opening address to the subscribers to the Windsor and Eton Public Library, of which the learned knight is president) told me by a late highly-respected inhabitant of Windsor, as a fact which he could personally testify, having occurred in a village where he resided several years, and where he actually was at the time it took place. The blacksmith of the village had got hold of Richardson's novel of "Pamela, or Virtue Rewarded," and used to read it aloud, in the long summer evenings, seated on his anvil, and never failed to have a large and attentive audience. It is a pretty long-winded book, but their patience was fully a match for the author's prolixity, and they fairly listened to it all. At length when the happy turn of fortune arrived which brings the young hero and heroine together and sets them living long and happily, according to the most approved rules, the congregation were so delighted as to raise a great shout, and, procuring the church keys, actually set the parish bells a-ringing.

National Traits.—Every nation has its traits. The Spaniards sleep on every affair of importance—the Italians fiddle—the Germans smoke—the French promise every thing—the British eat—and the Americans talk upon every thing.

Moving speech.—In the House of Commons, Dr. Philpots made a speech on the Irish Church Temporalities' Bill, which drew tears from the eyes of Mr. Stanley. Mr. Stanley has the family interest of £15,000 per annum in the Irish Church. Both the honorable secretary's sympathy and piety were touched on this occasion.

The public are grumbling greatly at the increase in the price of sugar and other West India produce. This is surely very unreasonable. If people are discontented now, what will they be when they find that they have paid £20,000,000 to abolish slavery in our own colonies, merely to enable Brazils and Cuba to raise sugar by slave labour, and to charge for it an enhanced price?—Felix Farley's Bristol Journal.

A bold and zealous defender of prisoners belonging to the home circuit had in a late trial at Chelmsford, several times told a witness, whose character was not too high, that he must state nothing which did not come into the presence of the prisoner at the bar. At length the time for cross-examination arrived. The learned gentleman began by asking "Pray, how often have you been transported?" "Nay," answered the witness, "I must not tell you that, for it was not in the presence of the prisoner."

Two Scotchmen, messmates and bosom cronies, from the same little clachan, happened to be stationed near each other, when the celebrated intimation was displayed from the Admiral's ship. "Look up, and read yon, Jock," said the one to the other: "'England expects every man to do his duty'—not a word frae puir auld Scotland on this occasion." Jock cocked his eye at the object for a moment, and, turning to his companion, thus addressed him—"Man, Geordie, is that all your sense!—Scotland kens well enough that her bairns will do their duty—that's just a hint to the Englishers!"

An Adventure.—A ludicrous adventure occurred on Saturday morning to a master mason who was called to top out a chimney in Brattle-street. There being no scuttle to the house, he got on the roof through a lutheran window, and was scrambling to the chimney on his hands and feet, when fancying he was slipping back and must inevitably fall to the ground, he made a desperate effort, and reached the ridge pole; here he sat some time, holding on by his nails, before he could recover courage enough to commence operations. After a while, however, he took heart, raised himself up and caught hold of the mouth of the chimney, when his fear returning he sat down, one leg in and one outside of the flue, and his hands grasping the bricks with good faith. In spite of every exertion, he could not recover his self-possession, nor shake off pallid fear. To return the way he ascended, was impossible, and there was but one mode of escape left, to descend the chimney, and down he went. The flue was not of equal dimensions, and after a descent of about twenty feet, the poor fellow found his progress suddenly arrested, and himself wedged into the chimney, without power to move up or down. As soon as his predicament was known, other masons were sent for, and he was cut out, half dead with suffocation and fright, and the topping out of the chimney was postponed to the next fair day.—Boston Transcript.

Catification of Squirrels.—A gentleman, from Medway, in this State, has given us the following curious case of domestication. A sportsman in that vicinity not long since took possession of a squirrel's nest, in which he found two of the little animals apparently about a day or two old. He carried them home, and put them under the tuition of Grimalkin, who luckily happened to have a brood of kittens of nearly the same age and size, two of which he ruthlessly, and without the least regard to principle, abducted for the purpose of making room for the bush-tailed and long-whiskered interlopers. The cat nursed them all with an indiscriminate parental affection; and the squirrels are at this time, being about a month old, as much at home with both the old cat and the rest of the family, as the kittens themselves. The whole troop of the unmannerly little rascals (as our friend says) may be seen racing about the house together in all weather, heads up and tails flying, for all the world like a smart corps of dragoons. —Boston Mercantile Journal.

The Almshouse Boy.—A youth who was brought up at the almshouse, was lately taken into the family of Mrs. —, in Pearl street, to run errands. The first day he became an inmate of her house, the following dialogue passed between them:—"Are you not sorry, my dear," said Mrs. —, "to leave home?" "No," answered he, "I don't care." "Is there not somebody at home you are sorry to leave?" resumed she. "No," replied the boy, "I am not sorry to leave any body." "What, not those who are good to you?" rejoined she. "Nobody was ever good to me," said the boy. Mrs. — was touched with the child's answer, which strongly painted his helpless lot, and the cold indifference of the world. The tear stood in her eye. "My poor little fellow," said she, after a short pause, "was nobody ever good to you! have you no friend, my dear?"—"No, for old dusty Bob, the ragman, died last week." "And was he your friend?" "Yes, that he was," replied the boy, "he once gave me a piece of gingerbread!"—New-York Sun.

Maxims.—If any man values you merely for your dress, rest assured you will never be indebted to his kindness for a suit of clothes, if you should want them.

Many men become great through having first become little; you seldom see a man jump to any height without stooping when he takes his spring.

Never put it into any one's head to do you a mischief, by acquainting him that it is in his power.

Trust him little who praises all; him less who censures all; and him least who is indifferent about all.

The first consideration with a knave is how to help himself, and the second, how to do it with the appearance of helping you.
