follow his mendicant avocation on the two preceeding days, which was readily granted, and it was each day accompanied in his walk, by a crowd of children of all sizes and ages, for whom he exerted his musical talents to the utmost, (and he certainly plays well,) to win, not golden opinions, but silver and copper coins, for which he tendered his thanks in the most humble and characteristic style; intimating frequently, less by words than action, "that the smallest favors would be gratefully received and thankfully acknowledged." We cannot state exactly the amount of his receipts, but know that he disbursed as follows: To a widow in very indigent and distressed circumstances, £2; to the Sunday School Fund, £1; Lending Library, 10s.; Roman Catholic Chapel's poor box, £1; and to four other poor widows, £2;—making in all £6 10s. Is it a matter of notoriety that the piper wished to preserve his incognito, it would be unfair in us or in any other to attempt to unmask him, were it in our power; but we are quite at liberty to say, that he is evidently a well informed man, easy and gentleman-like in his manners, (when off the stage,) decidedly a Scotchman by birth, and, in our opinion, a Militaire; his age apparently from 45 to 50.

In our last interview, he informed us that it was his intention to travel through the United States, from whence he will return by water to St. John—and visit Fredericton and Halifax, where we understand his erratic peregrinations will terminate; and from whence he will return to London, when the bet pending between him and his French rival will be decided by the production of the requisite vouchers, for the nett proceeds deposited by each, in the several towns which they have visited in their respective routes.

The following is from the Durham Chronicle.

We are enabled, in consequence of a gentleman being in this country who is well acquainted with the nature of this individual's engagement, to give to our readers in general, and the sporting classes in particular, a more correct account of him than has yet appeared. He was for a considerable time an officer in the army, served under Sir John Moore and the Duke of Wellington, and sold his commission after the battle of Waterloo. His opponent is Count Bender, a French nobleman, but educated in Scotland, at the same school with the piper, and between whom a great friendship subsisted. They met in London in 1825, when a dispute arose concerning the hospitality of different nations, which ended in both parties finally and firmly agreeing for the sum of £5,000 to travel in disguise: the one as a Fiddler in France and Belgium, and the other (our hero) as a Piper in Great-Britain and Ireland, to subsist upon what the public might be pleased to give them, unsolicited; and whoever should have the most money in the end was to gain the prize. They both commenced their wanderings in the Summer of 1825, but an uncle of the Piper's, who then held an official situation, having heard of their freak put a stop to their proceedings before the end of three months; this gentleman, however, died in 1827, which left both parties free from restraint, in consequence of which they started in August, 1828,—the one from Stonehaven in Scotland, and the other from Calais in France. This important compaign was only intended to last three years, and would have finished before now, had not the piper received a severe hurt from the upsetting of a stage coach in Ireland, which confined him for fifteen months, during which there was a secession of operations on both sides. The Piper, during his illness, lay at the house of Sir Thomas Butler, Bart. Ballintemple, County Carlow, where he met with the greatest kindness; indeed the Irish, high and low, seem to have completely entered into the spirit of the undertaking.

He was never allowed in any one instance to pay any thing to the hotels where he put up; waiter, chamber-maid, boots, and porter, all refused to accept remuneration for their services—nay, the very beggar wished his "Honor good luck and a safe journey," without laying him under further contribution. He says that he has been charged in all instances to the utmost extent in England; we could have wished it had been otherwise for the sake of the honour of our national character; besides, it is not only robbing the Piper, but also the poor, as up to this date he has given the sum of £700 to the different charities on his route.
