POETRY.

THE DYING SOLDIER.

BY MISS PARDOE.

Written on reading the death of Sir John Moore, at Corunna.

Raise yet again my sinking head,
And tell me of my fight;
I know my heart's best blood is shed,
And quenched my manhood's might.
Yet comrade, yet I fain would hear,
Ere cold in death I lie,
The shout come pealing on my ear,
Of Britain's victory!

I see, I see a host draw nigh;
They're British who advance!
And those who fly—in panic fly—
They are the troops of France!
Oh! tell me that I do not rave—
Whisper those words again—
And I shall sink into the grave
Without one groan of pain.

I thank thee for the glorious tale;
I knew it must be so—
For when did British soldiers fail
Before a foreign foe?
In glory I lay down my head,
'Mid shouts of victory!
Not, not in vain my blood was shed—
Now, comrade, let me die!

THE CONVICT GIRL.

There was one, a Welsh girl, not above nineteen. She could not speak a word of English. * * * * She was the most dejected of the whole. She used to stand at the gangway from morning till night, looking on the water and crying. For a fortnight they could not get her to eat. She would take nothing but a drink of cold water, or now and then an apple or pear. Owen thinks she came from Beaumaris, but forgets what was her crime. She was perfectly quiet.—Evidence of John Owen, boatswain of the Amphytrite, wrecked off Bulogne, August 31.

My home! my home! my mountain home,
I see thee now no more!
My path is now on ocean's foam,
My lullaby its roar;
And parting thus, my home, from thee,
No hope the pang endears—
No voice has breath'd a prayer for me,
Unwept I shed these tears.

Around me crowd strange things of crime,
Pollution meets mine eye,
But not a look of childhood's time—
Nor tone of home is nigh;
Aad this, ay this, they mercy call
For her who sought a grave;
Homeless, they hold me still in thrall—
An outcast, yet a slave!

Dark wave! dark wave, that roll'st in pride
To lash yon distant shore,
Oh! bear my spirit on thy tide,
To visit it once more:
If but my tears could there find rest,
In mingling with thy spray;
I'd fling my fondness on thy breast,
And weep this heart away.

But no! thou'rt false as him whose spell
Worked madness in this brain,
Whose love destroyed where'er it fell—
Whom vengeance sought in vain.
Farewell! I'd sooner trust thy hate,
'Mid ocean's wildest swell,
Than trust this love to such a fate;—
My mountain home, farewell!

MISCELLANY.

London Police.—A Hopeless Case.—A pale-faced elderly man, with a woe-begone countenance, approached Mr. Chambers, and, in a voice of doleful despondency, begged that he would grant him his protection.

Mr. C.—Protection, against whom?

Complainant—Against my wife. She's always beating me.

Beating you! Then have her bound over to keep the peace. I have done so; but its of no use. She kicked me three times this morning because I had not finished a pair of weltings when the gentleman called for them. She gets drunk, and then I catches it worse than ever.

Lock up the money and then she can't get drunk.—Hah! but she will keep the cash herself.

Part from her, then, and allow her a separate maintenance.—She won't let me.

Then run away to America. I don't see how a Magistrate can help you.

The applicant paused, looked at the ceiling, shook his head dismally, and walked out of the office.

Party Spirit.—Those who remember him cannot fail to recollect that the celebrated John Wilks was one of the ugliest men imaginable. Once upon a time, as Wilks was speaking from the Middlesex hustings, a supporter was so transported by his eloquence, as to exclaim—"What a beautiful man he is!" "Beautiful!" exclaimed a bystander, "why he squints confoundedly." "Not a bit more," rejoined the other, "than a gentleman ought to squint."

The Tender Heart.—"Although I am the finisher of the law," said Jonathan Mills, the hangman at Aberdeen, "I'm the tenderest hearted man in a' Scotland." In proof of this assertion, Johnnie being once called on to execute a woman at Arbroath, whilst he was adjusting the rope round her neck, she began to shrink, and manifest other symptoms of terror. "Dinna be fleyed, my dear," said the feeling hangman "dinna be fleyed, I'll be as canny wi' you as ever I can."

A Novel Law Point.—The Supreme Court, at its law session in this city in March last, decided, that a grand child, borne eight months and a half after the death of his grandfather, is included in a bequest to grand-children "living at his decease."—N. Y. paper.

Infallibility.—Extract from Dr. Chalmer's sermon 'on the doctrine of Christian charity applied to the case of Religious difference:'

"It is said of the Papists that they ascribe an infallibility to the Pope, so that if he were to say one thing and the Bible another, his authority would carry it over the authority of God. And, think you, my brethren, that there is no such Popery among you? You all have, or ought to have, Bibles; and how often is it repeated there, 'Hearken diligently unto me.' Now, do you obey this requirement, by making the reading of your Bibles a distinct and earnest exercise? Do you ever dare to bring your favorite minister to the tribunal of the word, or would you tremble at the presumption of such an attempt, so that the hearing of the word carries a greater authority over your mind than the reading of the word?—Now, this want of daring, this trembling at the very idea of a dissent from your minister, this indolent acquiescence in his doctrine, is just calling another man master; it is putting the authority of man over the authority of God; it is throwing yourself into a prostrate attitude at the footstool of infallibility; it is not just kissing the toe of reverence, but it is the profound degradation of the mind and of all its faculties; and without the name of Popery, that your bosoms, your souls, may be infected with the substantial poison, and your conscience be weighed down by the oppressive shackles of Popery. And all this, in the noon day effulgence of a Protestant country, where the Bible, in your mother tongue, circulates among all your families,—where it may be met with on almost every shelf, and is ever soliciting you to look to the wisdom that is inscribed upon its pages."

Good News to Sailors.—It is really surprising to witness the numerous ways in which steam has of late years been made subservient to the purposes of man. As a power, it is, perhaps, the most interesting and important of any with which we are acquainted. And it is with feelings of high satisfaction we have to call the public attention to Mr. Wells' invaluable apparatus exhibited on Saturday, the 21st inst. at Westminister bridge, for converting sea water into pure fresh water. The process is so simple, and the quantity of water obtained in a short time so great, that it far exceeded the expectation of the numerous scientific gentlemen who witnessed the process. The machine cooked the dinner and made pure water from sea water at the rate of 14 gallons per hour, with a small consumption of fuel. The mode of condensation is admirable (the river or sea being made condensor.) Few persons are aware of the sufferings of sailors at sea for the want of pure water, but we may now look forward with confident hope to the time when the prediction of Czar Peter the Great shall be verified, "that the period would arrive when the ocean would be the sailor's tank." Many persons of rank and scientific knowledge have witnessed the apparatus at work, and have declared their conviction of the incalculable advantages of it, if it be but patronized as they consider it deserves.—London paper.

DREADFUL FIRE AT OLDHAM.—THIRTEEN LIVES LOST.

One of the most calamitous events that we have had to record for some years, took place at Oldham on Saturday last. About half-past one o'clock, flames were discovered issuing from the fifth story of "the Union Mill," a large factory at "Side of the Moor," belonging to Mr. Lea Birch; and occupied by Messrs. Garside & Mayall, and others. An alarm was immediately given, and in a very short time a crowd of persons were collected round the mill, who rendered every assistance in their power to extinguish the flames. The two fire engines of the town were well supplied with water, from a large reservoir close to the building, but all the efforts used to overcome the conflagration were unavailing, and in less than half an hour the roof fell in.

At this time the flames had not extended to the lower stories, and about twenty intrepid fellows were busily employed in attempting to save the machinery in the lower rooms; the immense weight of the machinery above, however, and of the falling ruins of the roof, carried along with them in their fall the other floors of the building, and 8 or 10 individuals, who were employed in saving the machinery, were buried beneath the mass of burning ruins! Several of those who escaped by jumping through the windows were seriously hurt. The attention of the crowd was now, of course, directed to the extrication of their companions, but so far as we can gather from the testimony of eye-witnesses, not one of them was rescued from destruction! The probability is that, with two exceptions, which we shall notice below, the whole of them were crushed to death by the falling mass, before the flames had reached them.

While search was going on for the bodies, as well as the raging of the destructive element would permit, the attention of the crowd was attracted by the cries of a man named Thos. Mills, who, when the floors fell in, was standing near a door which led to an adjoining range of warehouses. The floors had fallen so as to enclose this unfortunate being in a kind of cell, and after two hours of extraordinary exertion, he was discovered by the persons at work, seated on the remains of a partition wall which had given way along with the floors. The feelings of the fellow, in such a situation of accumulated horror, it is utterly impossible to describe; but some faint idea may be formed of them when we state that his legs were literally crushed to pieces by the weight of the beams and machinery which had fallen upon them, and which held them so fast that the united exertions of half a dozen men pulling at a rope which they had succeeded in fastening round his body were unable to remove him. It was contemplated as the only chance of saving the unfortunate fellow that his body could be torn from his mutilated legs, but this could not be effected; and in his agony, he prayed in the most piteous accents, that the men would fetch a saw, and cut off his legs! During the whole of this time the flames were raging fearfully around the unfortunate man, and the gallant fellows who so generously risked their lives in attempting to rescue him; and such was the intensity of the heat, that a considerable mass of fused cast iron was afterwards found near the spot where he sat.—But horrible as this may appear, it is far exceeded by the melancholy events which afterwards occurred. While the men were thus employed in endeavouring to release Mills, a large portion of the factory wall, having lost all its support by the falling of the floors, gave way, and three or four of the intrepid fellows were buried in the ruins, and they must have been instantly crushed to death by the weight of the falling materials. The falling of this wall also terminated the sufferings of poor Mills, who was crushed beneath it, after remaining nearly three hours in the dreadful situation we have described. As a climax to this scene of horror, we may state that Mills' wife, in an advanced state of pregnancy, was an eye-witness of the exertions made for his release, and of his melancholy end!

Amongst the men who were in the building when the floors fell in, was the engineer, Ralph Kershaw. He was near one of the windows when he perceived the awful fate that awaited him, and the only prospect he had of escape was to seize hold of a shaft of iron which still retained its hold in the wall, and which the flames had rendered almost red hot. Without hesitation he seized this shaft with his hands, and retained his hold for a considerable length of time; the alternative being instant destruction in the flames which were roaring with the fury of a furnace beneath him. His cries drew several persons to his assistance, and after some exertions on their part he was released from the horrid situation, but only to meet a more lingering and therefore more painful death. When he found that he could relinquish his hold of the burning iron with safety, he did so, but we shudder when we relate that the whole of the flesh on the inside of the hands and fingers separated from the bones, and the bones themselves were completely blackened by the heat! A similar effect had been produced by the heat from below on one of the feet of the unfortunate man, from which he had lost the shoe, and the whole of his body from the waist downwards was literally roasted, and had the appearance of hard sole leather! He was conveyed home in this state, and was attended by Mr. Earnshaw, surgeon; but he was beyond all human aid, and after lingering in the most excruciating agony for about twenty-four hours, he died.

The flames continued to rage with unabated fury until about five o'clock in the morning, when they ceased only for want of fuel to continue them. Fears were entertained from the first that the neighbouring factories, of which there are two or three within a very short distance, would also have taken fire; but by the exertions of the firemen and spectators, who laboured with an alacrity and good will which is highly creditable to them, the flames were prevented from extending.

As soon as a prudent regard for the lives of the survivors would permit, the work of clearing away the ruins was commenced, in order to discover the remains of those who had fallen victims to their zeal in trying to arrest the progress of the flames, and in exerting themselves to save human life. And over the scene which ensued, we would willingly draw a veil as too horrible almost for description. Here a piece of skull was dug out—there an arm or a leg was discovered, and at length the mangled trunks of the unfortunate beings were dragged out of the ruins, scorched, mutilated, and disfigured in such a manner that they could only be recognised by a shred of their clothing, a button, or a shoe! In this way the fragments of thirteen bodies were dug out by Monday morning, eleven of whom were claimed by their friends, while two others were so mutilated that up to last night they had not been recognised, and the names of twelve only had been returned to the authorities as having been missed. When we were on the spot yesterday evening, men were still employed in removing the rubbish, and it was expected that two or three other bodies would be found.

Mr. Ferrand, the Coroner, held an inquest over the bodies on Monday afternoon, when verdicts of Accidental Death were returned. The names of the sufferers already identified are, Thomas Mills, a spinner; Ralph Kershaw, an engineer; Thomas Coffin, a collier; Nicholas Newton, a collier; Joseph Evanson, a shoemaker; Isaac Schofield, a spinner; James Turner, a spinner; William Knott, a piecer; William Dunkerley; Philip Nield, a carder; and James Greenhalgh, a tin-plate worker.

The origin of this melancholy event can only be conjectured, as no person was employed in the mill at the time the fire broke out. The probability is, that the fire was occasioned by the friction of a shaft which had not been properly oiled or greased, and that the heat thus occasioned set fire to the adjoining wood-work, and other combustible materials in the mill. Some idea of the magnitude of the conflagration will be formed, when it is stated that the building was six stories in height, thirty-six yards long, and sixteen yards wide. The value of the machinery upon the premises is loosely estimated at £10,000; other property, consisting of raw cotton and twist, at from £1000 to £2000; and nearly 400 persons will be thrown out of employ in consequence. Very little, comparatively, was saved; and we understand insurance had not been effected to any thing near the amount destroyed. Such a scene of devastation as the building now presents we scarcely ever beheld. Very little more than the end walls are standing, and they appear to be so much shaken that they will have to be taken down. The chimney and part of the engine-house also remain, and the former is the only part of the building that appears to have escaped without injury.

Most of the unfortunate sufferers, we lament to say, are married men with families. Their miseries was promptly brought under the consideration of the benevolent and humane, and on Sunday evening, a public meeting was held at the Black Swan Inn, for the purpose of originating a subscription for their relief. William Braddock, Esq. was called to the chair, and a series of resolutions were adopted, and a committee appointed for collecting and distributing the subscriptions, which will doubtless be liberally given. Thomas Broadbent, Esq. was appointed Treasurer of the fund, and the committee comprises the names of all the clergy and dissenting ministers in the town and neighborhood, the churchwardens, overseers, and constables of the town, and about forty of the most influential inhabitants.—Manchester Herald, July 2.
