POETRY.

THE FIRST MAN.

Respectfully inscribed to T. Campbell, Esq. author of "The Last Man."

BY C. SWAIN.

THE Mind is victor over Time!
The dial of the brain
Points not to hours, but years sublime,
That o'er oblivion reign!
Immortal as its primal source,
It scatters centuries in its course—
Explores the worlds of thought;
Nor folds its heav'n-enfranchised wing,
Till reach'd that intellectual spring
Which crowns the shore it sought!

The Spirit of the Past appears—
The Present fades—is gone!
The feelings of unnumber'd years
Are centred into one!
A radiance o'er my vision glows,
While spreads that Eden of repose
Ere Sorrows sway began;
I see that morn whose light unfurl'd,
Woke the first sabbath of the world
Upon the soul of man!

No cloud hangs o'er the far serene,
Earth smiles amidst her flowers,
As though that moment God had been
In her Elysian bowers!
Yet holier than the earth or sky,
A presence born of Deity,
With grace-illumin'd brow,
Glorious, as from Jehovah's hands,
The parent of earth's millions stands
Before my vision now.

Erect—ere sin had bowed his frame,
And struck his forehead dim;
Ere, exiled to eternal shame,
By swords of cherubim,
He heard the voice of God complain—
Saw branded on the brow of Cain
The mark with murder red;
Knew all the horrors guilt must know,
Which, like an avalanche of woe,
Swept ruin on his head!

I mark'd those lineaments divine
In their immortal bloom;
Unmarr'd by one degrading line,
Prophetic of their doom;
I gazed—and back'd the steeds of thought,
Midst years of blood one act had wrought:
Then traced the steps of time
Through all that dread eternity—
The universe of graves to be—
From flood, disease, and crime!

The cities of the earth display'd
Their toil-oppressed race;
Mo it that linger'd in the shade,
Whilst Pride usurp'd her place:
There lay the plague-polluted corse,—
Envy, and Hatred, and Remorse,
The passion's burning flow;
There lurk'd Revenge with poignard bare—
Terror that darken'd to despair—
And Infamy, and Woe!

Where towers that high imperial form,
That majesty of glance,
That brow o'er which the soul's wild storm
Of passions ne'er advance?
Fast by the living fount of love,
Behold that god-like being move,
In harmony how just!
Then, on the Cross of Calvary,
Thy crucified Redeemer see,
And hide thy head in dust!

Rise! rise! ye everlasting spheres,
And wake the hymn of life!
Praise Him, ye eighteen hundred years,
With man's salvation rife!
Though sin, and woe, and death prevail,
The rock of ages shall not fail,
Whilst Faith on earth may dwell;
The soul baptized in Christ shall rise
Triumphant to its native skies,
Despite the powers of hell!

MISCELLANY.

To my old friend Mr. Dwight, of the New York Daily Advertiser.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10, 1834.

Seein that you haint hearn from me now for a considerable long spell, I suppose you begun to think I had gone to Araby, where the Gineral threatened to go once when the people began to send petitions to him last winter—but my good old friend, ever since I writ you my last letter, I haint had time to do nothing in that way: and this is about the cause on't. When I wrote to you last, I was busy getting my boots footed and greas'd, and all things mended and slick'd up, and intended to go to Saratogue and all about them parts, to keep an eye on the "next Government;" but comin to look about me here, I found all the folks of the Government and "the Government" itself all off, and not a critter left here to keep things a-goin but me and Mr. Forsyth, the new Secretary of State, and as I have a great likin for Mr. Forsyth, and seein that he was rather new in the business, I thought I would stay and lend him a hand, and wait here till either the present Government or the next Government got back agin. Well, I hadn't been long at it afore I began to feel rather wamblechop'd; and one day Mr. Forsyth says to me, Major, says he, what's the matter; well says I, Governor, I don't know exactly, but I begin to feel considerable streaked; well, says he, I reckon I know what's the matter, and he come out with a long word that frightened me almost to pieces. I had hearn a good deal about the old Torys of said '76, and the new Torys of '34, and as my father and grandfather had battled agin the old ones, I didn't somehow fear much about the new ones; and I knew there was a good many kind of new Torys; there was the present Government Torys, and the next Government Torys, and the tape & twine Torys, and the safety fund One Dollar bill Torys; but here was another kind of Torys I hadn't thought on before, and Governor Forsyth said there warn't a doubt they then had hold on me, and them was the Premoni-Torys. As soon as the word was out of his mouth I sprung round like all possest; says I, Governor, do you think it is really so? there is no doubt on't, says he; why, says I, how you talk! for if that is so, there is no time to lose, says I, for so long as there is any ailin about Major Downing, that has got any kind of Tory about it, it is time for folks to look out.—Well, says he, Major, if you like another name better, says he, I'll give it to you, and so says he, you've got the Kolaree.—Do tell, says I, if that's all I'll soon fix that; and why didn't you say so at first, instead of tellin a body about that other plagy ailin? and with that I went to work right off puttin things to rights. The first go off I took a leetle less New England in my switchell; but that didn't do much good; then agin I took a double dose, but that ony made things worse—it was like porin warm water down one's back on a cold frosty mornin; it felt plagy good whilst you was at it, but in a minit arter, it was worse and worse; at last I stopp'd all kind of hard licker, and arter a little spell I felt pritty chirck. I stuck to this plan a few days and kept cool and good natur'd and eat nothin but good sound food, and drank nothin but clear cold water, and above all I kept up pluck and trusted to Providence for the rest: and in less than one week there warn't a mite of no kind of premoni*torys*, nor any kind of tory about me, and I was as sound as a grannit. But I had a pritty tuff time on't I tell you; for according to the nater of all these kind of ailins that has got any tory about 'em, if you don't stop 'em they go on and go on, till folks go into what the Doctors call the colaps, and then you turn as blue as an indigo bag, and then Kamfire and Laudnum and burnt Brandy and Kian pepper and mustard and hard rubbin aint no kind of use—it's all over then.

I and Mr. Forsyth us'd to have a good many long talks about it, and when I was busy battlin agin them plagy premoni*torys* he us'd to call and see me, and I would talk over matters with him. One day, says I, Governor, did you ever have a notion that there is a plagy strong likeness between the nater of a man and the nater of a nation? Well, says he, Major, I don't know exactly that there aint, and then agin I think there aint none at all. Very well, says I, don't commit yourself, but I've got a notion, says I, that there is a plagy strong likeness. Now, says I, look at me, look at that are leg and that are arm, and this hand, and see this breast, says I, (and I gave a whack on it with my hand, like a sledgehammer on an anvil;) now says I, aint that altogether a pretty considerable pattern of a man? is there any kind of rot about that, says I? Nothin, says he, that I know on, except that plagy premoni*tory*. Well, says I, that aint nothin yet, and scarcely feel it; yes, says he, but if you don't put a stop to it, Major, it will, I reckon, lead to trouble putty soon. Well, says I, that's true enuff, Governor, and I know as far as experience goes, many as stout and strong a chap as I am now, on Thursdy, aint been worth the labor of berryin him on Saturdy. Now, says I, that's the nater of man; and now let us look at the natur of a nation—and instead of goin all about creation let us look at home—here is a pattern of a nation worth looking at, and there aint nothin in any part of creation that can hold a candle to it. Twelve million of folks all strung together by a constitution and a set of laws, made by themselves for their own security and happiness—and every thing so accurately balanc'd and check'd, that nothing but wilfulness can throw it out of its gearing. But, says I, like me, it has got some ailin now about it—there is premonitorys, says I, at work upon it to a sartinty, and there must be a stop put to 'em, or things will look blue enuf pritty soon, and nothin will save it from colaps, then all's over with us, and we shan't be a bit better off than some of the Portageese and Spanish nations in South America.

There aint, says I, no man living, who thought he would do so much good as the Gineral thought he could, afore he got to be the Government, but some how it turns out tother way, and I believe it all comes from the listenin Gineral to the kind of folks who like themselves better than they do him or the country, and turnin away from him his best friends and the best friends of the country. The worst on't is, says I, the Gineral thinks that every man who has a different opinion of his measures, is not only his enemy but the enemy of his country. When the Gineral writ that letter to Mr. Munro, and tell'd him to be the President of the country, and not of a party, every patriot said that's sound doctrine.—When he said that members of Congress hadn't ought to be appointed to office under the Government, every body said that's pretty sound doctrine; and when he said that the patronage of the Government hadn't ought to come in conflict with the purity of elections, they said that's rale sound doctrine. He said a good many more sound things, but these are enuf to talk about now. Well, now, every man who aint of the Gineral's party is considered a scamp, and not to be trusted—that aint sound practice, for I have a notion there are a good many folks as pure and patriotic as ever lived, who aint of the Gineral's party. Then agin the Gineral has appinted more members of Congress than you can shake a stick at; but though that aint according to his promise, yet I do'nt complain on't, for its hard for any class of men to be cut off from servin the country if they are fit for it—so that was a bad promise better broke than kept. But what lifts my dander is about the Government officers mixin in elections, for right in the face and eyes of what the Gineral said, there aint no sich active folks at the polls as the folks who have got office. Now, says I, there is the head man of the hull on 'em—the next Government himself—what is he about, says I—I suppose, says I, he was so afraid that the "patronage of the Government would come in conflict with the purity of elections"—that nothin would do but he must go and look to it himself, and see that all went right. Well, Major, says Mr. Forsyth, that is no doubt true enuf, for there aint no man so particular about these matters as Mr. Van Buren. Well, says I, that makes me think of old Jethro Gleason, the miller, and his two sons—every time the boys was busy baggin up a grist for the customers, old Jethro was sure to come in, and says he, Elihu, haint you taken the toll out? Yes, sir, said Elihu, I took it out; and then he'd go to the other boy, and says he, Elem, have you taken the toll out? O yes, daddy, I look to that always myself. You young rascal, said old Jethro, I don't believe a word on't; and with that he'd dip out the toll a third time to make sure on't.

But, says I, all that is nothing to what I think is the worst of the premonitorys; and that is the plaguy editors all about tryin to stir up one class of folks agin another—the poor agin the rich—just as tho' a man who, by industry, had got a little aforehand in the world, was a natural enemy of a man who had no property.—Every man, says I, who is able to work and earn a livin, in this country, is, accordin to my notion, a rich man; for though he haint got as much money as some others, he sleeps sounder, and has a better appetite, and the laws protect him alike with others—if he gets sick and can't work, and his family is in want, who does he go to for assistance? does he go to these party editors and office-holders?—or does he go to families of property and character for assistance?—And when poor foreigners come to this country and want work, who gives it to them?—do political newspaper editors and office-holders give it to them?—do they build houses, and work farms, and thus give honorable employment to thousands of poor and honest foreigners?—not one on 'em—but they are cruel enuf to sarve party purposes—to tell these poor foreigners to knock down the rich and their houses, and that the rich always grind the poor, and all that kind of slang—it is too bad—that's worse than Kollaree—that's agin law and agin common sense; and I never think on't without bilin right up. Now, says I, these are the premonitorys, which I am afraid are goin on worse and worse; and if not stopped, will go right into a cold sweat and collaps. But, says I, there is a remedy, and that is, for every man, rich and poor, to look to the laws—obey the laws—go to the ballot-box, and put in his honest vote, and do all he can to keep the peace, and suffer no bad man to advise him to the contrary. Aint that a good remedy, says I, Governor? It is so, Major, said Mr. Forsyth. Wo'nt that keep off the collaps? says I. It will so, says he. Wo'nt things git blue, says I, if it aint attended to. I'm afraid so, says Mr Forsyth. Then, says I, if I go clear of collaps and Kollaree by dropping all kinds of hard lickors, and by keeping cool, and watchin agin things getting worse with me, and folks all about the country take my advice at elections, and obey the laws, and commit no riots, these National premonitorys—like these things that are now hangin on to me—will go off; and the nation, like me, will be again as tuff and as sound as old granit.

And with that, Mr. Forsyth jumps up, and took my hand, and, says he, Major, that's rale sound doctrine; and there aint no true patriot in the country that wo'nt say so. Well, then, says I, do'nt it turn out that what I said was true, that there is a strong likeness between a man and his ailins and a nation and its ailins? There is no doubt on't, says he. So that was an end to the premonitory and Kollaree business. Now my good old friend, Mr. Dwight, I have only a few words more to say. I hear tell that riots and deviltry is feared at your next election; and its enuf to bring on kolaree to think on't, that sich a fine city, the pride of the country, and the envy of all creation, should even be disgraced by a riot. I wo'nt believe it; for when you come to think on't, riots very seldom injure the folks intended, but frighten poor innocent women and little children, and come plagy hard too on police and law officers, for they are bound to keep the peace, and must do it at the risk of life; so that no good comes on't but evil. But if by any chance bad folks will make riots (and none but bad folks will) let every good citizen stand by the officers of the law—and let the cry be, support the laws—keep good order.

HOW TO MAKE FISH.—It is stated in the "Curiosities of Literature," that "the King of Bithynia, in some expedition against the Scythians, in the winter, and at a great distance from the sea, had a violent longing for a small fish called aphy—a pilchard, a herring, or an anchovy. His cook cut a turnip to the perfect imitation of its shape; then fried it in oil, salted, and well powdered it with the grains of a dozen black poppies. His Majesty's taste was so exquisitely deceived, that he praised the root to his guests as an excellent fish."
