POETRY.

LINES—By Mrs. Opie.

Supposed to be addressed by a Brazilian to the Messenger Bird, who comes, as the Brazilian believes, from the Land of Spirits.

When shalt thou wing to the spirit land
Thy glad return, thou bird ?
Await from us some fond command,
And bear some greeting word.

Some word of love to friends who are
At rest on the spirit shore;
And say that those still mourning here,
Are glad they mourn no more.

Are glad that theirs are fadeless flowers,
And youth's returning bloom;
And joys that can no more be ours,
In this vain world of gloom.

Yet say, we hope those lov'd on earth,
They do not quite forget,
Who think of them in grief or mirth,
With faithful, fond regret.

And tho' parents there may the child forget,
On earth their joy and pride;
The child's fond tears will be flowing yet,
When the parents' eyes are dried.

And welcome, bird of the shadowy wing,
Art thou to this earthly shore,
With thee thou seem'st the charm to bring,
Of hours we know no more.

Thou com'st from those we lov'd the best,
And each voice most dear hast heard;
Then bear our message, thou welcome guest,
But soon return, sweet bird !

TO THE BACCHANAL.

I know that the goblet is tempting and bright—
But why should I peril my soul ?
They tell me there's joy in its flattering light,
When 'tis written 'There's death in the bowl !'

Ye tell me a charm is concealed in its smile,
To lull all my sorrows to rest;
When I know that a serpent is circling the while,
To sting with distraction the breast !

Nay, nay, take it back—'tis the minion of Death,
And demons lurk 'neath its warm smile;
There are vapours as damp as the charnel-house breath,
Concealed in the wine-cup's deep guile.

I have stood where the revellers crowded at night,
And seen them with eagerness quaff;
And loud were their curses of fiendish delight,
And wild was their maniac laugh.

Oh ! think not to win me my soul to destroy,
By pleasures so wretched as this;
I ask not to sip at your fountain of joy,
If such be the Bacchanal's bliss.

Then take ye the goblet away from my sight,
And leave me my cool limpid wave;
For the pleasures that smile in its treacherous light
Are but rose-buds adorning the grave.

MISCELLANY.

[From the St. Andrews' Standard, Sept. 4.]

A FOREST FOUNDLING.

Averse as we are to the practice of seizing on any little local incident, and rendering it the subject of embellished detail, yet we occasionally hear of occurrences so touching and pathetic in their nature as to awaken our sympathies and interest us in their narration. Of such a nature is that which we now present to the reader.

Mr. Charles Bearghan left the northeast part of this Province a short time ago, and took what is called the upper road from Fredericton to St. Stephens, on his way to the United States. On the 5th of August, he passed the thriving village at Hart's mill, on the Rushagonis, very early in the morning, and expected to reach Trew's tavern at the Piskahagan by night. Properly equipped for the woods, furnished with suitable provisions, his blanket, his axe slung behind, and his gun on his shoulder, he trudged gaily along, until he arrived at Shin Creek, which is unbridged, and was at that time much swollen with the late rains. A woodman seldom hesitates at such obstacles: he proceeded up the bank of a stream, and set about felling a tree across it, to serve as a temporary bridge; it swung aside in falling, and, launching into deep water, it moved away majestically down the stream. Our traveller "looked and looked, and wist not what to do." He was not inclined to resume the axe, and therefore resolved to proceed up the stream in hopes of finding a favourable place for crossing. At length he arrived at one of those placid-looking pools which form deep stretches in our rivers and are generally termed still water-places. Here he made a kind of raft sufficient to bear up his clothes and gun, and keep them dry, while he swam over, and drew them after him.—He was soon busily engaged in re-habiting his limbs, and refreshing himself with a bit of biscuit, seated on the flowery margin of a natural meadow which extended along the banks of the stream, when his ear was startled by a whining noise resembling the sounds frequently uttered by young bears. He instantly seized his gun, examined the touch-hole and reprimed; then, clapping a ball into the barrel, he cautiously stole towards the spot whence the sounds issued. They were no longer uttered, but he now and then heard a noise among the underbrush and perceived a twitching motion of the twigs and spray, but could not discover what caused them. Convinced, however, that he had some animal to encounter, his gun was at his shoulder and his finger on the trigger. He then silently reasoned with himself whether or not he should fire at random, but experience cautioned him against so rash an action, for no animal is more furious than a wounded bear. As thus he mused, his eyes became suddenly dilated, his heart throbbed violently, he raised himself erect, and let the but of his gun drop quickly to the ground ! What had he seen ? what did he gaze at ? Behold ! among the raspberry bushes—and seen through the interstices of their many twinkling leaves of dewy green—behold ! he sees a beautiful infantile arm fitfully stretched out, and little taper fingers plucking the rich, ripe, crimson fruit.

"with look intent,
"And eye and ear attentive bent,"

After he had experienced the first flush of the mingled emotions of surprise at the extraordinary sight—of horror at the bare idea of his gun and his intended act—and of pleasure in the expectation of meeting society in these deep and solemn solitudes, our traveller advanced and beheld a little girl, about seven years old, sedulously engaged in pulling and eating of the abundant wild berries that were spread in great variety over that naturally rich and verdant spot. She appeared to be an interesting child; her clothes had a respectable look, albeit they were most woefully rent and worn; her fair hair played in disordered ringlets over her cheek, which was begrimed and pale, and her soft blue eyes were red with weeping. She burst out into wild hysteric wailings which sunk suddenly into convulsive sobs.

The traveller was lost in utter amazement, and hemmed aloud, to attract the child's attention. Alarmed, in her turn, at his appearance, half habited as he was, she screamed—fled a few steps—fell, and covered her face with her hands. He was quickly by her side, and used the kindest, the most soothing expressions to gain her confidence, and calm her fears. She had fallen more from bodily weakness than from fear, although she had been greatly alarmed at the unexpected appearance of the stranger. At length she ventured to look up, and, with a sweet but languid smile, said low and faintly, "O now—I am sure you wo'nt hurt me—O I am very sure you will not kill me." "Kill you ! God forbid," was the full-hearted reply. "O I am very tired—I've been very very hungry, but I got plenty raspberries here—I only eat the goody ones; I never take them as have the spiders on 'em, mother bid me not to." "Where is your mother, my dear child?" eagerly inquired the traveller; and he was answered in great simplicity, "she's at home, sir, I guess—but mam do'nt know where I be—I ca'nt find out the way home ever so long." "What, my child, have you strayed, and are lost? Come to that flowery knoll with me—God has sent me to preserve your life—come, and I will give you some nice biscuit and bit of meat—you are weak and worn, but I will take care of you." The poor innocent's soul burst forth into a flood of grateful tears, not attended with that hysteric affection which she had lately suffered. She derived great relief from weeping, and prepared to follow her new benefactor, but the excitement she had just experienced, acting on her sensitive, delicate and exhausted frame, had shaken every nerve, and completely prostrated her strength. She was unable to walk, but the kind and generous Bearghan carried her to the bank of the river where he had left his little store, and judiciously regaled her with spare and gradual portions of food.

As soon as she was moderately refreshed, her artless answers to his enquiries informed him that her name was Lydia Harper; her parents live near Hart's mills; she had been sent with dinner to her father, who was making shingles a little way in the woods, but missed the right track, got bewildered, and wandered astray. "When I knew I was lost," she said, "O I was very frightened—I screamed, and ran about, and threw away father's dinner." It appears that she walked the first night until she sank down, nearly stupified with fatigue. The traveller asked if she was not afraid when it grew dark, and she was all alone and lost in the woods, to which she replied, "I was a kind of frightened all the time, but when I lay down I said my prayers that mam learnt me, and then I was'nt frightened." "Do you remember the prayer?" "O, I does, sir,—it is:—

'I will lay me down in peace, and take my rest, for it is thou, Lord, only, that makest me to dwell in safety; and into thy hands I recommend my spirit, my soul, and my body, for thou hast redeemed me, O Lord, thou God of truth.—Amen.'"

Mr. Bearghan next began to consider how the child was to be brought along.—He was 16 miles past her father's, and his business would not allow him to return: he was about 12 miles from Trew's, and no house between. The child was unable to walk; he rigged out a contrivance by means of his blanket, and carried her forward on his back. The delightful consciousness of performing a good action buoyed up his spirits and nerved his frame, and he beguiled the rigour of his laborious task by the prattle of his little foundling, who had now become more sprightly and free.

As he journeyed along, he enquired if she had seen any wild beasts in the woods, and she answered, "No, I did'nt—only once—two black dogs were coming to me—they were not Mr. Burpe's dogs—they stopt, and one stood up on its hind feet—they did'nt bark, but runned away again." Our traveller smiled at the child's simplicity, while she continued to say—"Oh, sir, last night—O when I awoke in the middle of the night, O how glad I was !—I tho't I was close to home, for I heard the cattle trampling about me.—I could'nt see nothing—none of them had bells, and when I called Star and Bright, they lay still: O I was glad, and my heart was beating and beating—I lay very still too to listen, and so I just dropt away to sleep again—was'nt it a pity—they were all gone in the morning." "Providence seems to have defended you in an especial manner, my child, against hidden dangers and death," said the traveller.

Having carried his helpless charge until daylight was gone, his fatigue was increasing by the difficulty of walking on an almost trackless road in the dark, and the moon did not rise until near 10 o'clock. At length he arrived at a deserted log hut, within two miles of Trew's, and being almost exhausted, he determined to make a short stoppage to recruit. Here he tho't to leave the child, wrapped in his blanket, whilst he should hurry on, and send back immediate relief. He struck a light, partook of some refreshments with her, but found great difficulty in getting her to consent to remain behind. After he had prepared a pretty comfortable bed for her, and placed her snugly in it, he sat down to watch until she should fall asleep. The moon had just risen, and before he started, he gently approached the child to find if she were perfectly composed; he held the light towards her, she opened her blue eyes full upon him, she averted her head, and sobbed. "No !" exclaimed the traveller, "by all that's sacred, I swear I will not leave you behind !" He forthwith slung his axe and his gun, resumed his former equipment, raised little Lydia from her lonely couch, and carried her safely to the long-looked-for house of entertainment.—Although it was quite late, Capt. Josiah Trew was easily aroused to admit the toil-worn traveller and his little companion, who now stood beside him at the threshold; for something told him that it was more seemly that she should walk than be carried into the house. He had also tied a handkerchief under her chin, in the fashion of the gypsy head-dress.

They were soon placed by a comfortable fire in a good house, well stored, and blessed with a hearty and hospitable landlord. The females as is the custom of the country, were speedily afoot and busily preparing the required repast. We fancy we can see the mirth-lit countenance of facetious Josiah, beaming with downright exultation as he issued his multifarious orders for every viand the house could afford to comfort the wearied travellers. We can also fancy that we see his features o'erclouded and his eye glistening with genuine feeling as he related that the whole country side had been up and in search of a child lost in the woods; that parties had gone in all directions but unhappily without success; and that one of the people deeply distressed on the occasion was now in the house. Our traveller immediately exclaimed that Providence had made him the happy instrument of recovering that lost child who now sat before them. Every one flew round the little girl, examined and fondelled her, and vented exclamations of amazement and satisfaction. During this sudden bustle a person from the adjoining chamber rushed wildly in among the company, snatched the hand of little Lydia, gazed on her for a moment, then clasped her to his bosom. It was her father !

What a scene was here ! what an overflowing of the finest feelings which adorn humanity ! what a giddying interchange of those pure affections which spring from sincerity and truth ! But what tongue can tell, what pen pourtray the varied emotions which fleeted in rapid succession thro' the minds of that painfully happy group? The half-frantic joy and gratitude of the parent—the wondering fits of delight of the enfeebled little sufferer—the conscious self-satisfaction of the deliverer—the officious but sincere gratulations of the excited inmates—must all be estimated by the susceptibility of the reader.

The beautiful train of circumstances which Providence employed in this affecting story is worthy of serious consideration. If the traveller had passed Hartt's Mills when people were stirring abroad; if Shin-creek had been bridged; if the tree had fallen across; if he had no gun when he thought a bear was by—if these facts had happened, the child might have perished.

He who sustains the mighty planets in their courses and controls the motion of a particle of dust—He who rules the awful storm and sends forth the smiling sunbeam, works his wise purposes in mystery to us—

'Come then, expressive silence, muse His praise.'

White-headed Sea Eagle.—Elevated on the dead limb of some gigantic tree, that commands a wide view of the neighbouring shore and ocean, he seems calmly to contemplate the motions of the various feathered tribes that pursue their busy avocations below; the snow-white gulls slowly winnowing the air; the busy tringas coursing along the sand; trains of ducks streaming over the surface; silent and watchful cranes intent in wading; clamorous crows, and all the winged multitudes that subsist by the bounty of this vast liquid magazine of nature. High over all these, hovers one whose action instantly arrests his attention. By his wide curvature of wing, and sudden suspension in the air, he knows him to be a fish-hawk, settling over some devoted victim of the deep. His eye kindles at the sight; and, balancing himself with half opened wings on the branch, he watches the result. Down, rapid as an arrow from heaven, descends the distant object of his attention—the roar of its wings reaching the ear as it disappears in the deep, makes the surges foam around ! At this moment the eager looks of the eagle are all ardour; and, levelling his neck for flight he sees the fish-hawk once more emerge, struggling with his prey, and mounting in the air with exulting screams. These are the signals for our hero, who, launching into the air, instantly gives chase, soon gains on the fish-hawk; each exerts his utmost to mount above the other, displaying, in these rencontres, the most elegant and sublime aerial evolutions. The unencumbered eagle rapidly advances, and is just on the point of reaching his opponent, when, with a sudden scream, probably of despair and honest execration, the latter drops his fish; the eagle, poising himself for a moment, as if to take a more certain aim, descends like a whirlwind, snatches it in his grasp ere it reaches the water, and bears his ill-gotten booty silently away to the woods.—Wilson's Ornithology.

Gullibility.—Not many years since, an adroit Yankee, in search of adventures, passed this way. He insinuated himself into the good graces of all the housewives, by his lamentations over their damaged crockery. He had, he said, an unfailing cure, a perfect remedy, for the restoration to a sound state, of their broken ware. "It must be he's very honest," said they, when warned against him, "he seems so nice, so clever a man." So he was set to work, and all the broken household implements put in repair, with the strictest injunction not to disturb them for at least a fortnight. He would be back then, he said, and if all was not satisfactory, oh, why, of course, he should return the money and make the repairs again gratuitously. The time expired and the articles were lifted, but, alas, they would not stay mended; it was all still broken crockery. Some-how-or-other, it has never been convenient for the mender to come back this way.—Northampton Courier.

Cure for Idleness.—It is said there are no strolling idle fellows in Holland, for whenever such a one has been found, he has been put into a cistern from which he could not get out, and a sluice of water let in upon him. He was furnished with a pump, by working which he could keep the water out, otherwise he must drown. Why not try this experiment upon idlers in this country? They are drones; they eat the honey and corrupt the young.—Westfield Journal.

Banking.—A person most anxious to obtain the best information on the solvency of another, called on his banker, and inquired if Mr. A. kept cash there. 'Why,' says the banker, 'he certainly has an account with us, but where he keeps his cash I really cannot tell.'
