General Agency & Petition Office,
FREDERICTON.

AFTER mature consideration, on the advantages to be derived by the Public of New Brunswick, in the saving of time, attendance, and expense, from the establishment of an Office at Head Quarters, under the above title, by some one perfectly acquainted with the routine of official business, and unconnected with any other pursuit: and on the inconvenience, to say no more, which persons are liable to from the want of such a channel of communication, the undersigned has opened such an office, and places himself at the disposal of those who may at any time require his services.

The Agency will, for the present, be chiefly confined to the usual business transactions with the Public Departments, but more especially with the Crown Land Office. There is an appointed channel through which matters unconnected with the Crown Land Office, generally pass; but it is clear, that an Agent on the spot, acquainted as before mentioned, may, even here, be occasionally of use.

It is presumed that a constant residence of nine years at the Seat of Government, always in some way publicly engaged—and of which, three years were steadily spent in the Crown Land Office—must have some recommendation. Any thing further, is perhaps better left to time and experience. It should however be added, that as the Agent is wholly unconnected with, and independent of the Public Departments, he will be free to act for the interests of all who may employ him, with strict impartiality and unbiassed zeal.

Testimonials of the first character will with great pleasure be exhibited to such as may require it. RICHARD THOS. EDGHILL.
Fredericton, N. B. 11th July, 1834.
☞ The Office adjoins the Sheriff's Office.

POETRY.

IANTHE.

BY EDWARD FITZGERALD, ESQ.

DAY had gone down, and evening flung
Her shadow o'er the hill:
Day had gone down, and yet she clung
Beside the lattice still:
She looked upon the river,
No bark its waters bear;
She heard the aspens quiver,
No footstep glideth there:
'There was a time it needed
No eye to strain its sight;
Is all—is all unheeded?—
Oh! will he come to-night?

'The silent stars, he told me,
The sad and silent stars,
To-night should see him fold me,
Despite my lattice bars:
The hurried clouds are shading
The lamps of yon kiosk;
The wearied moon is fading
O'er minaret and mosque:
The steed—the steed has faltered,
That never failed before;
The heart—the heart is altered—
Oh! will he come no more?'

The token-flowers she culled him
Have lost their hues of spring;
The lute that oft had lulled him
Sleeps with a voiceless string!
Alas! Love ever closes
His sweetest song with sighs;
Love ever bathes his roses
With tears from maiden's eyes:
A morning song he sings us
Of blooming skies and bowers;
The evening gifts he brings us—
Pale cheeks and withered flowers!

MISCELLANY.

IRISH RUINS.—"Now, with all deference, it is suggested that there are monuments of antiquity in Ireland worthy of inspection: there is scenery on which the eye may rest with delight. We have woods, and waters, and glens, and mountains abundantly picturesque, and sufficient to call forth the exertion of the pen and pencil in their description." So writes Mr. Cæsar Otway; and his statement may be corroborated by all who have visited the country.

There are monuments of antiquity worthy of inspection; there is scenery on which the eye may rest with delight; and, withal, there are people, warm, kindly, and affectionare, to be met with in every dwelling. Within the mansion and within the hut, one vast spirit of hospitality presides. Whatever is possessed is shared, and shared by the heart as well as the hand. And YET,—alas, how sad it is that a single monosyllable should signify so much!—and YET, shine the sun ever so warmly, let the voice of mirth come upon your ear ever so gladly, there is fading in the beams of the one, and a wailing cadence in the last strains of the other, which says, "This is a land of ruins!"

"Irish Ruins!" The term is sadly comprehensive. It implies far more than the register of mouldering walls, or round, mysterious towers:—it calls to mind the ruined dwellings—the roofless cottages—the mismanaged farms—the improvident gentry—the trampled peasantry—in one sentence, the ruined country; the country over which foes triumph, and which "friends" betray,—whose worst enemies are of its own progeny,—whose sons may seek, and find, in every nation upon earth, except their own, prosperity and independence,—whose daughters, conspicuous for wit, beauty, and virtue, grace the courts of strangers, because the once gay and festive halls of Ireland are lone and desolate: the harps are hung upon willows—the grass grows in the streets—the land is one of ruins! Little prospers, even in its chief city. The merchants have ample leisure for salutations in the market places; and the young men squander time which, in well-regulated England, would be transmuted into gold. Yet, what heroes has this country sent forth to fight and conquer, that others might enjoy! What statesmen to regulate the affairs of Europe, and forget, in the magnitude of their employments, the little green speck that gave them birth! What poets, who founded songs upon her sorrows, and spent the emolument derived therefrom amongst aliens, and those who know her not! And yet the skies above her are blue and smiling, and the earth—the fertile earth—teems with abundance. It seems a mystery that centuries should pass and leave her more desolate and more depressed;—yet, so it has been, and so—for aught I can see—it will be for many a day to come, —"Sketches of Irish Highways," by Mrs. S. C. Hall.

REFLECTIONS.

Perhaps the gloomy barrier of the cold and desolate tomb once passed, the soul will be but more intensely conscious of that love which shadowed forth its existence in this life. Will those who have gone before await us on the other side?—and shall we be permitted to watch the arrival of those whom to leave made the only pang of death?—Will the hidden and unrequitted love be there acknowledged in earnest gratitude for its long endurance?—will it be allowed to breathe the free and happy air of heaven? How vain to inquire—and yet we inquire on! We ask of that which answers not. But when we recall how feverish, how wretched, how incomplete has been the life of mortality, we feel that the present owes us a future.—Miss Landon.

Remember that if discretion be the better part of valour, silence is the better part of discretion.—Ibid.

Who ever sits down to think over himself? Self is the only individual we take for granted. Were the character of any one of our friends to be sketched with tolerable accuracy, we should recognise the likeness at once; but let our own, drawn to the very life, be brought before us, we should not know it; and even when told, we should in all probability deny the acquaintance.—Ibid.

From the commonest flower, treasured because its perfume outlives its beauty, to our noblest achievements, where the mind puts forth all its power, we are prompted by that future which absorbs the present. The more we feel that we are finite, the more we cling to the infinite.—Ibid.

Ay, love teaches many lessons to a woman; but its last and worst must be when she learns to know that it is not eternal—that it can depart, and leave a scar never to be effaced, and a void never to be filled.—Ibid.

They—the body and the soul—are not friends, but enemies. The one curbs and confines, the other wears and shatters. Perpetual is the terrible struggle, till death parts the mortal and the immortal; and life, the riddle, is lost in the deeper secrets of eternity.

Interest is your only true cosmetic for smoothing the brow.
