some high toned remarks which rather served to put the magistrate on his "reserved rights." He soon made out a commitment for them, and they were escorted to Bridewell by some fifteen or twenty watchmen. Here their ill-brooked degradation led them into a squabble with the keeper, in which the noble Marquis was floored, as was also one of his companions. Here they remained several hours; but were finally liberated through the interference of his Honor the Mayor and the British Consul, after paying Carter, the watchman, $20 for injuries received, and listening to a most cutting rebuke from the magistrate.

Mr. J. Thom, the famous Ayrshire sculptor, has arrived in New York, and intends spending the remainder of his days in America.

LATEST FROM PARA.—Advices from Para, per William Penn, Captain Appleton, are up to the 14th ult. Some days after the ships of war and merchant vessels had retreated to the Bay of St. Antonio, permission was granted by the Brazillian Commodore to H. B. M. sloop of war Race Horse, Sir Jas. Everard Home, commander, to proceed to the city, taking under convoy the English and American merchant vessels, with a view of recovering some of the property left behind; after two days, they were allowed by the Indians to land, and succeeded in saving some valuable goods; heavy articles they were not allowed to take, particularly provisions, and such was the danger, that they could not protract the time to save further; and on their leaving, were honored with a parting salute, the guns loaded with balls.

Thus, through the interposition and protection afforded by Sir James Everard Home, of H. B. M. Sloop Race Horse, have the owners of the American vessels been placed under new obligations—and Capt. Appleton speaks of his services in the strongest terms of gratitude and respect.

The city was most thoroughly sacked—the whites were still pursued, and killed wherever found—the streets still were encumbered with the murdered bodies—and the most horrid and barbarous assassinations continued in all quarters. The William Penn came out under convoy of the Race Horse, in company with all the merchant vessels in the river, except two, the George and Caroline, which were chartered by the legal government to carry the distressed fugitives up to Camaty, to prevent a want of food among themselves.

The Indians were in possession of the river, and also the Salines, the pilot stations, and would seize any vessel they could take, that had powder or any thing they wanted.—Salem Reg.
