POETRY.

[FOR THE COURIER.]

ON THE LATE FIRE AT NEW-YORK.

'Twas at the midnight hour, when all was still,
A cry, a solemn cry, was heard around,
A wail—a shriek, of sad portentous ill
Enough, to wake the nations under ground
From sleep of death, so awfully profound.

And what that cry was, he can tell who erst,
Hath heard the city's larum deep and loud,
Or seen the flames with vengeful fury burst
Through rifted piles, which scarce their rage withstood.

Rous'd from their sleep, and quaking yet with fear,
The awe-struck thousands hasten to the scene,
Encountering meet, the priest and cavalier,
The ruined merchant, and the vagrant queen,
The trooper glistening in his armour's sheen.

Swift rose the flames, 'mid crashing roofs and groans,
More desolate than wailings o'er the dead,
Joined chorus with the murmurs, and the moans
Of outcasts, destitute of home or shed,
Once high—now low—once proud—their pride hath fled.

Oh Heavens! it was an awful sight to see,
That queen of cities, fair COLUMBIA's boast,
The mart of fame—the household of the free,
The resting place of wandering millions, toss'd
On this lone world—at once destroyed and lost.

Where are those halls, where lately met the gay,
The young, the noble, in the pride of life?
Where those proud monuments, which yesterday,
Told tales of blood, of massacre and strife?

Where are those collonades, those crowded malls—
Pavilions fretted o'er with magic hand—
The well carved statues and the marble walls,
The pride, the boast, the glory of the land?

Where are they now, those mansions where were heard
The din of business, and the hammer's voice?
Where are those chambers which a people rear'd,*
And thousands entered yearly to rejoice?

Fallen to the earth, in one unshapen mass!
Domes, pillars, statues, all in ruins lie—
No more the stranger pauses, ere he pass,
To view their beauties with admiring eye;
A heap of dust now claims the blazonry.

Even as the sailor's bark moves o'er that tide
Which mirror'd many an architectural scene,
He leans in anguish o'er the vessel's side,
And seeks amphibious glories where they've been,
Then sighs to see nought save the waves bright sheen.

Yet though the wreck be painful to the sight,
A nation's efforts shall restore the whole;—
And domes shall rise—and glisten in the light,
And statues stand—while this great sphere shall roll,
Or man be written, on time's boundless scroll.

MISCELLANY.

"ANOTHER YEAR HAS FLED."

TIME, in his onward, ceaseless journeying—his rapid, yet almost unconscious flight,—has rolled into the past, another annual period of existence. We have stepped upon the threshold of a new year; and at such a time, it is good for us to pause for a moment, and give our minds up to reflection. Looking back upon the past, we can scarcely realize how swiftly we have hastened on. The incidents and occurrences of the year just closed—the animated hopes, the pleasing enjoyments,—the afflictions and sufferings,—which have alternately cheered and depressed us—flit like a mist across our vision, and we endeavor in vain to analyze or solve the vague and indefinite feelings which occupy and agitate the mind. We are still here, while thousands and thousands who peopled the globe a twelvemonth ago—who, like ourselves, looked forward to many years of happiness; perceiving in the indistinct future some prominent good, towards which they bent their strong energies, but which eluded pursuit, until at length they were swallowed up in the ocean of eternity. The rich and the poor, the philanthropic and the iron-hearted, the learned and the unlearned, the wise and the foolish, have indiscriminately fallen by the hand of the "King of Terrors." He has shunned neither sex, age, nor condition of man. No section of the world has entirely escaped his ravages. He has invaded our neighborhood—our very fireside. He has struck down at a blow our companions and friends, around whom clung our tenderest affections, our fondest hopes. And yet we are spared—the span of our existence is lengthened, our opportunities of improvement and of doing good are continued:—Why?—when so many myriads are called away—is a mystery which here can never be clearly revealed. An all-wise Providence controls and directs the affairs of the earth, and he who submits to its decrees with that genuine philosophy which recognizes a wholesome moral in every event, be it painful or otherwise, manifests true wisdom,—has unfailing sources of enjoyment, and will never become the victim of cankering, peace-destroying misanthropy. Herein lies the secret of true happiness; and let none disregard it.

"Another year has fled! What, already? Let us see what the past has affected us. This day, a year ago, we set out with resolves to spend less time idly, and more in study. To live less extravagantly, and to do more for our suffering neighbours—to sleep less—to rise earlier—to accumulate knowledge—to climb assiduously the ladder of fame—and to be content with nothing short of eminence. How do we stand now? Have the temptations of life conquered our resolutions? and are we still unable to throw off the shackles of sloth, which clog our exertions, and enervate our faculties? If so, we must begin again, with resolutions which cannot be broken. We must do it promptly, for—

"The greatest schemes that human wit can forge,
Or bold ambition dares to put in practice,
Depend upon our husbanding a moment."

"Another year has fled? Let it go—nay, hurry it into oblivion, and let us quickly commence another.—It went rapidly, but the next must go swifter. The world moves now by steam—it is buried in a tempest of smoke, bursting up with impetuous fury, and its inhabitants ride on the whirlwind, with tremendous shouts, and deafening uproar! The sober, dull monotonous realities of former years, have given place to the whizz and buzz of wild imagination. What a scrambling there is to go ahead! What strenuous efforts are made to get the world on a rail road!—Sixty miles an hour—fifty clear gain in a single year—in ten more five hundred. Five hundred miles an hour—admirable! In less than a century more, old father Time himself will be distanced, and driven off the course.

The current of life dashes on with amazing rapidity. The rocks and precipices in the passage give impetus to its swiftness; but whether we ride impetuously through the whirlpools, or glide smoothly and safely on the calm lake, our eager eyes are piercing the mist, and our arm grasping the shadowy images dancing before us. The experience of the past is forgotten; for when the clear vision of the eye dissolves the illusions the imagination again seeks to be clouded in the dreamy fancies of the future."—Boston Evening Gazette.

THE LATE FIRE IN NEW-YORK.

The general gloom which the late calamity has spread over this City, for the moment paralyses the faculties of the most courageous. Truly, the visitation has been in the fullest sense of the word, awful, and its desolating effects pervade every artery of private and public life, and fill the heart with mourning. The aggregate loss, we think—when the number of buildings are taken into account, and their valuable contents duly estimated—may be set down at not less than twenty millions, four times the amount of the claims on France. Such a loss for one City is indeed appalling, but it nevertheless conveys some idea of the magnitude and affluence of that city, to be able to sustain it.

But if it becomes us as Christians, as it certainly does, to be duly impressed with, and to receive with humility, the dispensation Providence has sent upon us, it also becomes us as men to take courage, and to bear with fortitude that which cannot be averted. The spirit and indomitable enterprise of this community, although paralysed for the moment, is not extinguished, and before the smoke shall have entirely passed from the desolate ruins, the mist of despair will have passed from men's minds, and a cheering sunshine of hope returned. The injury is great, but the means of repair are greater, and we venture to predict that within a few months, nay even weeks, the great resources and regenerating vigour of this vast commercial emporium will astonish even its own inhabitants. Like the Phœnix from its ashes, it will arise in all the vigour and beauty of youth.—Albion.

An instance of prompt submission to the civil authorities, worthy of all praise, occurred yesterday morning. Before the fire had commenced its ravages in Water-street, west of Old slip, while it was uncertain whether it would pass over to Coenties slip, one of our merchants feeling so secure that he had made no removal of his goods, was waited upon in the street by General Swift, who addressed him thus—"Mr. P——, I am directed by his honor the Mayor to request the key of your store, which I am going to blow up." The merchant, without the slightest hesitation, placed it in his hands with this reply,—"There it is sir,"—and in less than fifteen minutes his store and property, worth perhaps fifty thousand dollars, were in ruins.—New-York Commercial Advertiser, Dec. 18.

The property of Arthur Tappan & Co. was rescued mainly by the blacks, who rushed into the store after it was hot as an oven. By these means more than $100,000 worth of goods were removed to a place of safety. It is said that it was with difficulty that the negroes were restrained from rushing in after the flames had communicated to the upper stories.—Mr. Tappan, it will be recollected, is the great friend of the abolition of slavery in the United States.

Mr. Stephen Whitney had just built twenty-four stores, at an expense of $10,000 each; all were levelled with the ground, and no insurance.

Among the ruins of the Exchange, the Jersey Little Falls Company dug out their Iron Chest, containing $23,000 in bills—all secure.

A committee of investigation, appointed to discover the origin of the fire, have reported, after diligent inquiry, that it was accidental, and probably occasioned by the bursting of a gas pipe, and the distribution of the gas until it came in contact with the coals in a stove or grate of the store in which it originated.

A large number of firemen went to New-York from Philadelphia on Friday, including nearly the whole of five companies, to relieve the New-York firemen.

The Herald states that Mr. Biddle, President of the United States Bank, had arrived in town for the purpose of extending all the relief which that institution could afford. On the first account of the conflagration reaching Philadelphia, Mr. Biddle convened the directors, who came promptly to this decision. If the United States Government loan to the Corporation, or to the Insurance Companies, their seven millions of United States Bank stock, it is said that the United States Bank will add three millions more on commercial security, for so long a period as the charter will permit.

We are glad to find that the United States Insurance Company will not only be able to pay its risks, but will go on—indeed, enough is already known to enable them to continue business as they now are doing. They have a large surplus over their liabilities—of which a statement will be published in a few days.

We also learn that the City Fire Insurance Company, not having lost more than half their capital, $300,000, are continuing their business as usual.

The United States Bank is to loan the Insurance Companies $2,000,000—receiving a transfer of mortgages to the same amount.

There are twenty-five fire Insurance Companies at New-York, with a total capital of $8,950,000. Eleven of them will be able to pay all their losses by the fire.

The Journal of Commerce of Monday says, that the North River, Bowery, and Greenwich Insurance Companies will also be able to pay their losses and to continue the business of insurance with a fair amount of capital. The Bowery company has probably lost more than any other. The Equitable and East River companies will pay all their losses, but most or all the others will be obliged to dissolve. A considerable amount of the property destroyed was insured in other cities.

THE GREAT FIRE IN LONDON, on the 2d of September, 1666, consumed 89 churches, 13,200 houses, and 400 streets, the City Gates, Guildhall, numerous public structures, hospitals, schools, libraries, and stately edifices, leaving a ruined space of 436 acres from the Tower to the Temple Church, and from the North-east Gate along the city wall, to Holborn Bridge, and destroying property to the estimated amount, even then of £10,000,000, or nearly $50,000,000. Yet within less than five years after this terrible calamity, the city was almost wholly rebuilt, in a style of far greater regularity, security, commodiousness, and salubrity.

Who then can doubt that New-York, with her commerce, the number, wealth and enterprise of her citizens, will not even more rapidly recover from the consequences of the recent fire.

At the period of the fire in London, its population was about 500,000.—N. Y. Mercantile.

[From the Boston Evening Gazette.]

PURE WATER.—The situation of our Wells and Cisterns with respect to water has become alarming. A great proportion of them are perfectly dry and their proprietors are obliged to send to the neighbouring towns for a supply. The City Government should immediately attempt to furnish a supply of water by one of the many plans that has been offered for their adoption. The one projected by Mr. Harris, is demonstrated to a certainty by operations in England and France, likewise in our own neighborhood. It is a grand idea as well as a bold project to furnish pure water sufficient for a great city by so novel a method. In addition to the many proofs that his plan is practicable, we republish from among many others on record, the following statements just made to the French Academy.

WATER OBTAINED BY BORING.—Artesian wells have been successfully constructed in some parts of France. A letter from M. Jauburt de Passa, to Viscount Hericart de Thury, describes a bored well, remarkable for the abundance of water which it supplies. It was made by M. Durand, two leagues south east of Perpignan.

The sound after penetrating to the depth of eighty feet, through alternate beds of marl and clay, entered a bed of sandy marl, three feet thick, from which issued a jet of water, very clear, but from the peculiarity of its taste, unfit for drink. Its temperature was 14° 5 Reaumer, (equal to 65° Fahrenheit,) and it rose from three to four feet above the surface.

A second boring, undertaken the distance of six feet from the first, gave, at the same depth, a jet of water, but the first jet diminished, and the quantity of water from both was less than that which first issued from the former. The boring of the latter was then continued to the depth of one hundred and forty-five feet, when the sound began to sink of itself, and when precipitately withdrawn the water rushed up to the height of five feet, and astonished all by its abundance and force. No obstacle could restrain it. No direct attempt was made to determine the maximum height to which it might rise, but fifty feet was decreed to be fully within the limits of its ascending force.

At the time the letter was written, several weeks after the first issue of the water, it continued to flow with the same violence, and with rather increased quantity. From the dimensions and velocity of the current, it appeared to supply four hundred and thirty gallons per minute, or two thousand eight hundred and eighty cubic metres per day.* A leaden weight of eight pounds, supported by a string, being placed in the tube, was rapidly thrown out by the water.

The whole cost of the well, was 263 francs, which is only $49,32.

* In English measure, six hundred and nineteen thousand two hundred gallons per day.

ARTESIAN WELLS.—In a meeting of the French Academy, held on the 28th of September, it was stated that a Mr. Mulot an Engineer had been boring for water, near the Chateau of Cange, situatied on the right bank of the Cher, near Tours, at the depth of 210 feet in chalk, which he reached in 21 days, he obtained water to the amount of 576 gallons per minute. At 375 feet, he opened a fountain which gave 960 gallons per minute. At 390 feet, a new sheet of water was reached, of 2400 gallons per minute; and finally having penetrated still further, he came to an actual torrent which threw up more than 3840 gallons of water and green colored gravel in a minute. This in 24 hours would amount to the enormous quantity of 5,529,600 gallons; a quantity as remarked by M. Arago, greater than is furnished to Paris by the river Bievre in the same time.

GEOLOGY AND MINERALOGY OF NOVA SCOTIA.—Dr. Gesner, of Parrsboro', has announced a work on these subjects—octavo form, 7s 6d half bound, 6s in boards; to be published as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers are received to pay the necesary expenses.—Public patronage should not be wanting to enable this gentleman, who has long been a most industrious student, and a liberal dispenser of his mineralogical stores, to lay his views on these important branches of science before the country. No man is more familiar with the more interesting of our mineralogical localities than Dr. Gesner. Others pay an occasional and hasty visit to Blomidon, Partridge Island, and Cape D'Or,—but he lives in their immediate neighbourhood; and, hammer in hand, is gathering information and specimens almost every week in the summer, We wish him every success in his enterprise, and shall be happy to forward the names of such persons as may desire to secure copies of the work.—Novascotian.

GENERAL EDUCATION.—We recommend to the careful perusal of our readers, a rather long but very able argument in favor of the principle of supporting a system of general education by assessment, which appears in this number, under the signature of a "Licensed Teacher." 'To this complexion we must come at last,' and all expedients which stand short of this—however good in themselves—are but as the gray dawn of early morning preceding the splendour of the perfect day. We would compel every man in Nova Scotia who was able, to educate his child as surely as we would oblige him to feed and clothe it. And for the poor and destitute, education should be provided at the public expense.—Ibid.
