POETRY.

[FOR THE COURIER.]

COME! HOIST ALOFT.

Come, hoist aloft the snow white sail,
And cast the moorings free,
The sky is clear,—fresh blows the gale,—
Hurrah! we 're on the sea.

Free as the winds that bear us on,
O'er ocean's path we fly;
One lingering look behind is thrown,
And tears bedim the eye.

To those we've known at Friendship's shrine,
Though few their names may be,—
To those we loved with love divine,
That look—those tears are due.

But hark! what means yon chorus wild?"
"'Tis but the seaman's song—
The anthem of the ocean child,
Borne by the breeze along.

"Amid the tempest's thund'ring roar,
Amid the dashing spray,
He views the dim receding shore,
And sings his parting lay."

"Land of strangers, fare thee well,
For a time,—perhaps, forever—
Hopes and fears my bosom swell,
But the fondest, fate will sever.

"Though thou 'rt barren, bleak, and drear,
There are hearts that better love thee
Than those climes, where all the year
Beams the sun, that shines above thee.

"Fare thee well,—perhaps our bark
Yet again may turn unto thee—
And those eyes ere closed and dark,
Beam with joy once more to view thee."

TO THE TOWN CLOCK.

Thou grave old Time Piece, many a time and oft
I've been your debtor for the time of day;
And every time I cast my eyes aloft,
And swell the debt—I think 'tis time to pay.
Thou, like a Sentinel upon a tower,
Has still announced "the enemy's" retreat,
And now, that I have got a leisure hour,
Thy praise, thou old Repeater, I'll repeat.

A very striking object, all must own,
For years you've been, and may for years remain,
And though fierce storms around your head have blown,
Your form erect, and clear and mellow tone,
Despite their violence, you still retain.

A "double face," some foolishly believe
Of gross deception is a certain sign;
But thy four faces may their fears relieve,
For who can boast so frank a life as thine?
You ne'er disguised your thoughts for purpose mean,
You ne'er conceal'd your knowledge from the crowd,
Like knaves and asses that I've sometimes seen,
But what you know, with fearlessness avow'd.

Time, with his scythe, could never mow you down,
Though you could cut him up in fragments small—
Showing his halves and quarters to the town,
Old Quarter Master General for us all.
Though unambitious, still the highest place
All ranks and classes cheerfully resign,
And 'looking up to thee,' feel no disgrace
If to "look down on them," thou dost incline.
While some the Graces seek,
And others love the Muses' rosy bowers—
Thou art content, from week to week,
To revel with the ever fleeting Hours.

How many curious scenes and odd displays
You've gazed upon, since first you took your stand;
How many sad, how many brilliant days,
You've had a hand in: Oh! that you could hand
Your knowledge down:
Your Log, your Album, all your observations,
Jokes and remarks on what you've heard and seen;
If, besides 'notes of time,' your cogitations
On all the doings that in time have been
You had recorded,
No Book would sell so well
About the town.
Nor any author be so well rewarded.

What various feelings in the human heart,
Thy tones have stirred:
How has the Lover cursed thee, when he heard
Thy voice proclaiming it was time to part.
With what a start
Of quick delight, about to be set free,
The Schoolboy heard you say that it was 3.
But then, next morning, how he'd sigh and whine
When you as frankly told him it was 9.
Oh! cruel Clock! thus carelessly to shout it,
If e'er you played
At Base, or By the Way, on the Parade,
You never would have said one word about it.

To wretch, condemned for flagrant crime to swing,
What horrid anguish would thy clear tones bring,
Telling his hour!
But, to the pilloried Scoundrel, placed on high,
Round whom stale fish and rotten eggs did fly—
A fearful shower;
Whose dodging shoulders, and averted eye,
Half uttered prayer, or sharp and piercing cry,
Betray'd his fears;
Who thought 'his hour' would surely last all day,
Sweet was thy welcome voice, when it did say
The storm about his ears
Should cease and die away.

How oft hast thou observed the hapless wight,
Who toiled, and raked, and scraped, from morning light
Till nearly three;
And yet had not enough his Note to pay,
Turn round to thee,
While throbbing brow, and nervous gait, did say
Hold, hold, good Clock, another quarter stay:
For if I cannot raise, or beg, or borrow,
My credit will have died before to-morrow,
For this, I do assure you,'s my 'last day.'
The sun stood still at Joshua's command,
Oh! be as kind, or I can never stand;
Ah! do—if you of pity have one drop,
If you 'go on,' by Heaven, I'll have 'to stop.'

How many dashing blades have gone to pot,
Who sought on Folly's files the first to be;
But never one, of all the precious lot,
Could live, old friend, so long 'on tick' as thee.
The cunning fellows, too, thou put'st to shame,
Who scheme, and plot, and plan from morn till eve;
Thy 'wheels within wheels' always go the same,
While they, some 'screw loose,' failing to perceive,
On every side their wrecked machinery leave.

A good example
To all the idle chaps about the town,
Who trample
On precepts by economists laid down,
You always gave;
Your hands were going night and day;
From year to year you toiled away
Like any slave;
Your limbs from heavy weights no hour were free,
And 'Sunday dawned no holiday to thee.'
You 'the whole figure' went while others faultered,
And howsoe'er times changed, your time you never alter'd.

THE SUN.

Come forth thou glorious sun,
And brighten up the skies;
And smile the world upon,
Whose life is in thine eyes.
Thou beautiful and bright,
Come to thy throne of day,
Within whose mellow light
My soul would melt away.

He comes! he comes! he blesses
Creation like a god,
And flings his golden tresses
Of glory all abroad!
Look up, my soul, forsaken
But now by every one,
To greet thy friend awaken,
The sun! the lovely sun!

MISCELLANY.

AN EXTRAORDINARY WIFE!—The last Advertiser, speaking of Mr. Willis, in an article on the New York Mirror, says, he recently married an English Arsenal! An English arsenal! His friends need not trouble themselves to defend him, for he has got a battery powerful enough to blow his enemies sky high. We pity the poor fellow—flesh and blood are bad enough in all consciences for a "help meet," but to have an arsenal for a rib is a little too tough. Wonder what sort of little responsibilities" he will have?—Will they come in the shape of Cannonades—Bombs—Pikes or grape-shot?—Our Government may set itself to rest about its defences, for Mr. Willis is a patriotic man, and would no doubt lend the country his wife in case of an emergency.—Boston Transcript.

Speculating on Speculators—A grave Speculation.—The speculating mania has raged worse, if possible, in England, than in Uncle Sam's dominions. The gambling spirit has not rioted mainly in land purchases, as with us, but in the establishment of joint stock companies for almost every imaginable object. It has seemed as if no project ever so ridiculous, could be imagined, into which a host of fools might not be engulphed, by adroitly impudent and scoundrel bubble manufacturers. In the three first months of the present year, no less than 104 joint stock companies had been projected in the towns of Liverpool and Manchester, with an aggregate capital of £33,000,000; and it was stated, during the discussion of the Budget in the House of Commons, that the number of joint stock companies projected in different parts of the kingdom, amounted to between 300 and 400, and that a capital of nearly £200,000,000, or about twenty times the capital of the Bank of England, would be required to carry them into effect!

As a natural consequence of this unnatural fervor of speculation, some projectors, quite as cunning as the rest, anticipating a considerable increase of mortality, have ingeniously determined to make the most of it, and have formed grave yard companies in almost all the large towns; and in Manchester, as peculiarly exposed to danger from the prevailing epidemic, there have been formed no less than six, which are said to offer speculators the best fancy stocks in the kingdom.—Boston Transcript.

CURIOUS FACT.—Effect of Cold on an Animal.—The Lemming is the smallest of the Polar quadrupeds; and strange to say, it has been found in the highest latitude that has yet been attained. Even on the ice of the Polar Ocean, to the northward of the 82d deg. latitude, the skeleton of one was seen. It is easily tamed, and fond of being caressed. One that had been but a few days confined, escaped during the night, and was found next morning on the ice alongside the ship. On putting down its cage, which it recognised in the servant's hand, it immediately went in. It lived for several months in the cabin; but finding that, unlike what occurred to our tame hares under similar circumstances, it retained its summer fur, I was induced to try the effect of exposing it for a short time to the winter temperature. It was accordingly placed on deck in a cage, on the 1st of February; and next morning, after having been exposed to a temperature 30 deg. below zero, the fur on the cheeks, and a patch on each shoulder, had become perfectly white. On the following day the patches on each shoulder had extended considerably, and on the posterior part of the body and flanks had turned to a dirty white. During the next four days, the change continued but slowly, and at the end of a week it was entirely white, with the exception of a dark band across the shoulders prolonged posteriously down to the middle of the back, forming a kind of saddle, where the color of the fur had not changed in the smallest degree. The thermometer continued 30 and 40 degrees below zero until the 18th, without producing any further change, when the poor little sufferer perished from the severity of the cold. On examining the skin, it appeared that all the white parts of the fur were longer than the unchanged portion, and that the ends of the fur only were white, so far as they exceeded in length the dark coloured fur, and by removing these white tips with a pair of scissors, it again appeared in its summer dress but slightly changed in colour, and precisely th same length as before the experiment.—Ross' Voyage.

An absurd custom.—In several instances the bishops, when signing their names, used the old Latin appellations, or abbreviations of them, for their sees, instead of the English ones. Thus Ebor, stands for York, Cantuar, for Canterbury, Vigorn, for Worcester, and Exon, for Exeter. Some well-meaning people are occasionally much perplexed by these subtleties. When the Princess Charlotte was labouring under an indisposition, the Bishop of Salisbury sent frequent inquiries to her Scotch physician signing himself J. Sarum. The doctor, unversed in these niceties, observed to a friend that he had been much pestered with notes from "ane Jean Saroom, that he ken'd nothing aboot. I tak nae notice of the fellow," said he.

THE TIDE.—A worthy minister belonging to Greenock had occasion to visit Campbeltown in June last on business of importance. While walking along the shore accompanied by a few friends the conversation between them happened to turn on the tide. The reverend gentleman inquired what they thought caused it to flow and ebb. One answered, "I think jist when it's in here it's out at Arran, and when it's out at Campeltown it's in at Arran." Another answered, "Weel, Sir, I think it's the doings o' Providence; and that jist when it's his pleasure it goes out an' in." A third answered, "that she thought Providence caused it to go out and in that poor people might get maragh, (shell-fish)!

IMPRESSMENT OF SEAMEN.—Granville Sharp tells us that he once called on Dr. Johnson, and "had a long debate with him about the legality of pressing seamen. He (the doctor) said it was a condition necessarily attending that way of life; and when they entered into it they must take it with all its circumstances; and, knowing this, it must be considered as voluntary service, like an innkeeper, who knows himself liable to have soldiers quartered upon him. The circumstance here alleged by Dr. Johnson is evidently no justification (nor was it perhaps, designed as such) of this method of recruiting the Navy. That a man is aware of the hardships attending any profession, which he may embrace, cannot extenuate their impolicy and injustice, if those qualities really attach to them. This question, like every other in morals and politics, must be determined by the principle of utility. But in the application of this principle, we must recollect, that the utility of preserving inviolate the rules of justice and equity is of the highest order, and can never be sacrificed with advantage, except in certain extraordinary emergencies, which it is possible indeed to conceive, but which rarely occur in actual life either to individuals or nations. That a naval force may be maintained, without the injustice and violence of impressment, is proved by example of the United States of America. Not a seaman treads the deck of one of their national vessels against his own consent. Every sailor enters the service by his own free will, and on conditions previously agreed upon. It is, as it ought to be, a bargain, an engagement, in which he consults his own pleasure or advantage."

VISIT TO PRESIDENT JACKSON.—In the evening Colonel Wheeler introduced us to the President General Jackson. We found him in company with Mr. Van Buren, the Vice President, who is a candidate for the supreme office at the period of regular vacancy. It was a gratifying opportunity of familiar and animated conversation over a cup of coffee, on topics connected with some of the most important interests of our respective countries. Recent intelligence from Europe was touched upon, and particularly news relative to Ireland, which led to a somewhat extended discussion of the compulsory support of religion as contrasted with that which is spontaneous and voluntary. It was gratifying to ascertain that the mind of the chief magistrate of this mighty nation was as free from all the sophistries arising out of the unhallowed blending of things sacred with the things secular, by the alliance of the Church with the State, as his person and court were disencumbered of the pomps of royal etiquette. He uttered with great emphasis, these memorable words, "Human legislation in matters of religion may make hypocrites, but it cannot make Christians." On the tithe system, particularly as it was working in Ireland, which led to the conversation, the President spoke with still kindling energy, and in terms which harmonized with what may now be considered public opinion in every part of the British empire till all the soldier was apparent, as the General exclaimed, "I had rather die a thousand deaths than see my wife and children starve while I was robbed of one tenth of my labour to support a religion I disapproved." The President is a man venerable for age, and distinguished for military talents. He courteously invited us to dine with him on our return from Virginia; a pleasure we were compelled to relinquish.—Drs. Cox and Hoby's Narrative.

PROSPERITY OF ENGLAND.—It would be seen new towns are springing up in England almost as rapidly as in the U. States. We find the following in the last London paper:—

"Heywood.—The cotton spinning and power loom weaving is very brisk. Joiners, bricklayers, &c. are scarce.—Nearly four hundred houses have been built, or are now in a state of erection."

What a contrast this to the days of England's military glory! Then every branch of industry was paralysed; the cries of poor, starving laborers came up in groans, and riots, and shouts of revolution. Now peace has spread quiet and prosperity on every side.

A Long Yarn.—It is stated in an English publication that a bale of Demara cotton may be spun into a thread 240,000 miles in length—long enough to reach from the earth to the moon.

In a report on the recent harvest, in Dumfries Courier, it is remarked that the average wages of labourer for the season was 1s 6d.

The price of new Irish Butter n Liverpool market, on the 6th of September, was 92 and 102s per cwt.

Steam Plough.—At the meeting of an Agricultural Society in East Suffolk, Lord Henniker stated that a steam plough was in use in Lincolnshire, which would plough 8 acres, and harrow 30 acres per day.

The Silk Loom.—A very important improvement has been made in the silk loom at Manchester, which is likely to operate very favourably upon the manufacture of this valuable article of trade, and it may be the means of transferring a very large portion of it from France and Italy to this country. It is now perfectly clear that steam power may be applied with the greatest advantage to the silk loom, which has heretofore been worked by hand only; and a young girl may weave, with this improvement, as much silk in a day as can be woven by two upon the present plan.—The new loom occupies but little more than half the space required by one in the common use, as all the apparatus connected with the weights is removed, and a spring substituted, which performs the work with much greater precision than it can be wrought by weights.

On one of the evenings of the Manchester Musical Festival there was to be a grand fancy dress ball, the number of tickets for which was limited to 7000. Of the number, 6000 were disposed of several days before the appointed time. Three acres of ground were taken for the purpose, and two-thirds of an acre for the supper room. A stage coach near Manchester, full of passengers for the festival was upset, and a gentleman of fortune from Dublin named O'Brien, and the coachman were killed. Several other persons were seriously injured.

New Process in Smelting Iron.—At the late meeting of the British Association in Bristol, Mr. Mushet exhibited some specimens of malleable iron which he prepared by a peculiar process and gave an exposition of his views in reference to the theory of smelting as usually conducted. The iron, when first reduced in the upper part of the surface, is in the malleable state, but in its progress downwards is, in virtue of exposure to a higher temperature, and he redundancy of charcoal it encounters, converted first into steel and finally into pig metal. This new process, consists in submitting the ore to the action alone which it experiences in the upper part of the furnace—that is, in restraining the heat and furnishing but a limited supply of carbon; and operating by such method, and without the use of lime, he stated that he was able to obtain at once, and by a single process, iron soft enough to be forged into nails.

The Ex-Queen of Naples, widow of King Murat, (Pauline Bonaparte, sister of Napoleon) arrived at Toulon on the 10th of September—being the first of that family who has been permitted to enter France for many years.

It is stated that a land proprietor of the province of New Russia has sent, as a present to the Emperor Nicholas, an amethyst, found in the mines of Siberia, weighing seven pounds. It is the largest that has ever been seen in Russia.

THE JEWS.—Whatever privileges these unfortunate men may have hitherto enjoyed in Prussia have been gradually taken away from them. An order of the Prussian Cabinet prescribes to the Jews to take no names in future but such as are derived from the Old Testament, and those who have other names are enjoined to change them.—Those, formerly, who have served in the army were promoted to superior grades, but they cannot reach that of Captain. They are also incapable of filling chairs in the University, or occupying any public functions.

Emigration to Greece from the neighbouring countries is increasing in a very satisfactory manner. More than 1,800 families of nomade herdsmen from Epirus, Macedonia, and Thessaly, have already arrived, and have brought with them 500,000 sheep and goats, and 20,000 horses. Though they have hitherto led a nomade life, they have requested of the Greek Government to be incorporated in different communes of the kingdom. Besides these, there are about 3000 families from the Aspro Potamos, among whom are many mechanics and country people, who also have desired to be incorporated into various communes. Many of them have already begun to build houses, to cultivate land, &c.—The Ipsariots, too, are disposed finally to settle in Eretia, now that the Government has granted them some advantages.—Letters from Athens in the German papers.

The following statement, if true, may be invaluable in the cure of the cholera: Two men employed in extracting salt from the lakes in the neighbourhood of Salzburgh, were attacked by the disease, and left by their medical attendants as incurable. Their bodies had become completely black, when the overseer of the works undertook to cure them. He heated a quantity of water from one of the salt lakes to a very high degree, and placed one of the dying men in the bath, keeping up the heat. After being in half an hour the man recovered his senses, and expressed how delightful were his sensations. Upon this the other sufferer was put into a similar bath. By degrees their bodies turned from black to purple, then to red, and at the end of three hours they assumed their natural colour, and the men were free from disease. It may be believed, that the pores, being opened by the heat, absorbed the saline particles, which mingled with the blood and liquified it. This corresponds with the known effects of salt upon coagulated blood.
