POETRY.

Mr. Chubb,

By inserting the following in your paper, you will oblige, your's, &c. MARY.

STANZAS.

Oh, let my soul its slumbers break,
Arouse its senses, and awake,
To see how soon,
Life, like its glories, fades away,
And the stern footsteps of decay,
Come stealing on.

And as we eye the rolling tide,
Down which our flowing minutes glide,
Alway so fast;
Let us the present hour employ,
And deem each future dream a joy,
Already past.

Let no vain hope deceive the mind,
No happier let us hope to find,
To-morrow than to day;
Our golden dreams of yore were bright,
Like them the present shall delight,
Like them decay.

Our lives like hastening streams must be,
That into one engulphing sea,
Are doomed to fall;
The sea of Death whose waves roll on,
O'er King and Kingdom, Crown and Throne,
And swallow all.

Alike the rivers lordly tide;
Alike the humble rivulets glide,
To that sad wave;
Death levels poverty and pride,
And rich and poor lie side by side,
Within the grave.

Our birth is but a starting place,
Life is the running of the race,
And Death the goal;
There all those glittering toys are brought,
That path alone of all unsought,
Is found of all.

Say then how poor and little worth,
Are all the glittering toys of earth,
That lure us here;
Dreams of a sleep that Death must break,
Alas! before it bids us wake,
Ye disappear.

Long ere the damps of Death can blight,
The cheeks' pure glow of red and white
Has passed away;
Youth smiled and all was heavenly fair,
Age came and laid his finger there,
And where are they.

Where is the strength that spurned decay,
The step that rolled so light and gay,
The heart's blythe tone;
The strength is gone, the step is slow,
And joy grows weariness and woe,
When age comes on.

THE BOAT OF LIFE.

BY THOS. MOORE.

Let's take this world as some wide scene,
Through which in frail but buoyant boat,
With skies now rude and now serene,
Together thou and I must float;
Beholding oft, on either shore,
Bright spots where we should love to stray;
But Time plies swift his flying oar,
And on we speed—away, away.

Should chilling winds and rain come on,
We'll raise our awning 'gainst the shower—
Sit closer till the storm is gone,
And smiling wait a sunnier hour;
And if that sunnier hour should shine,
We'll know its brightness cannot stay,
And happy while 'tis thine and mine,
Complain not when it fades away.

Thus reach we both, at last, that fall
Down which life's current all must go—
The dark, the brilliant, destined all
To sink into the void below!
Nor e'en that hour shall want its charms,
If side by side still fond we keep,
And calmly in each other's arms
Together linked, go down the steep.

MISCELLANY.

PATRIOTISM.

Patriotism or love of country is a sentiment which pervades almost every human breast, and induces each individual to prefer the land of his birth, not because it is better than another country, but merely because it is his country. This sentiment may be illustrated by a variety of anecdotes. Many of the Swiss, on account of the poverty of their country, are induced to seek military service in foreign lands. Yet in their voluntary exile, so strong is their affection for their native hills, that whole regiments have been said to be on the point of desertion, in consequence of the vivid recollections excited by one of their national songs.

A French writer informs us, that a native of one of the Asiatic Isles, amid the splendors of Paris, beholding a Banana tree in the Garden of Plants, bathed it with tears, and seemed for a moment to be transported to his own land. The Ethiopian imagines that God made his sands and deserts, while angels only were employed in forming the rest of the world. The Maltese, insulated on a rock, distinguish their island by the appellation of "The Flower of the World." The Japanese have such an affection for the place of their nativity that no advantages can induce them, particularly the agricultural tribes, to quit the tombs of their fathers. The Norwegians, proud of their barren summits, inscribe upon their rix dollars "Spirit, loyalty, valor, and whatever is honorable"; let the world learn among the rocks of Norway. The Esquimaux are no less attached to their frigid zone, esteeming the luxuries of blubber oil for food and an ice cabin for habitation, above all the refinements of other countries.

Such are some of the exhibitions of this universal sentiment, in less refined nations; in a state of higher civilization, it becomes a more exalted passion, and is thus beautifully expressed by Scott:

"Breathes there the man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land!
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burn'd,
As home his footsteps he hath turned,
From wandering on a foreign strand?
If such there be, go, mark him well;
For him no minstrel raptures swell;
High though his titles, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish can claim—
Despite those titles, power, and pelf,
The wretch concentred all in self,
Living, shall forfeit fair renown,
And, doubly dying shall go down
To the vile dust, from whence he sprung,
Unwept, unhonored, and unsung."

It might at first seem that patriotism, which implies a preference of one country over another, was opposed to philanthropy, which embraces in its generous scope the whole human family. But a consideration of the practical effect of patriotism will lead us not merely to dismiss all distrust, but to admire that dispensation of Providence, by which the inhabitants of every land, whether it be a region of sterile mountains, or an inhospitable climate of snow, or a land flowing with milk and honey, or a desert of sand, are attached to the soil where their lot is cast. In the first place, this love is a source of contentment and happiness, even though it may be founded in ignorance, or false comparisons; and in the second place, it excites the people to seek the good and promote the prosperity of the inhabitants. It stimulates them to act individually and unitedly, and in cases of emergency, to put forth great and successful efforts in the cause of country, whether it be to realize some desirable object, or avert some threatened evil.

Thus it would appear, that by implanting this sentiment in the breast of man, God has provided an active agent, the design and tendency of which is to cultivate and cherish the advantages which each country possesses; to develope its resources, to increase its comforts and riches, to raise the the standard of civilization, and in short to promote its true glory. Such is the design and such the tendency of that sentiment called patriotism; and if it is more circumscribed in its view than philanthropy, it is far removed from selfishness, and the bosom in which it dwells must be exalted and purified, in proportion to the sway it is permitted to exercise over the heart.

Patriotism, love of country, then, is not merely a justifiable sentiment, but it is also ennobling to the soul which feels it, and beneficial to the community which calls it into exercise. It is alike dictated by nature, and sanctioned by reason and religion. It becomes, therefore, a fit object of attention to all enlightened minds, and is worthy of the particular consideration of every one charged with the education of youth. While springing up spontaneously in the heart, it should be strengthened by all those means which are known to exert a strong influence on the young mind.—Parley.

First view of St. Petersburg.—Nothing of the same nature can be so imposing as the first view of St. Petersburg. The approach (from Friedland) is thro' a wild and desert track; nor is the city, owing to its low situation, visible at a distance; there are neither country seats nor gardens in the fauxbourg, to announce the proximity of a large town. With one exception, the steeples are not sufficiently high to be seen at a distance. The entrance is under an unostentatious wooden barrier—and for a mile, the traveller drives through a street formed of small wooden houses. Turning a sharp angle, he finds himself on a bridge considerably larger than that of Waterloo in the Strand. The river rolls its blue waters as if with conscious dignity on either side. Before him are the Admiralty, with a rich golden spire, the winter palace of the Emperor, the hermitage, a marble palace, and a succession of buildings, extending along the whole length of the granite quay, each of which might be a royal residence. This facade, the opposite fortress with its solid walls and massive buttresses, the floating bridges, and the summer gardens, fronted by a magnificent iron palisade with glittering top, form a coup de'œil surpassing every thing of the kind in Europe.

MODERN DEFINITIONS.

Applause.—To all but players something unsubstantial as the smell of a dinner, or the sound of a shilling.

Bagpipe.—The forerunner of some modern journal—being filled with puffs; a barbarous instrument men are positively rewarded by some for still playing upon.

Balcony.—A place for flower-pots to stand upon—romantic damsels to lean over—and lovers to climb up to.

Ball.—A thing that can turn round men and women's heads, by making them kick their heels.

Bamboozle.—To address compliments to a jury, a plain woman or a rich fool.

Beard.—A trophy boys long for every hour from twelve to sixteen and men curse every morning from 20 to 50.

Bending.—The 'first position' in the march of promotion.

Cat.—An animal old maids love, because it gives out sparks when it is rubbed.

Deserts.—What fortune does to merit; seldom what she gives.

Dun.—A more accurate time-keeper than ever Halley made.

Envy.—The oxidation of the soul; but it is only the meaner mines and old metals that rust.

Face.—Not only the title page of a man—but often, too, the table of contents.

The trade and prosperity of England is highly gratifying. The Quarter's Revenue made up on the 6th of April, indicates an increasing prosperity of the country, for there is not only an increase of the national resources on the quarter ending at the above period, but of the year also. The following is the result as extracted from the London papers of the 6th:—

The Revenue accounts for the quarter ended 5th April, 1836, show an increase both on the quarter and year as compared with the corresponding periods of 1835:—on the quarter, of £221,619; on the year, of £82,401. In the Excise, the increase is considerable, 175,738*l*. On the year however, the decrease in that branch is £429,570, owing to the transfer of duties to the Customs.—On the year's Customs there is an increase of £1,165,562; on the quarter, £162,961. The quarter's increase in Stamps, £43,497, the decrease in Taxes, £56,300. The decrease on the year's taxes, owing to reductions, is £692,404. Notwithstanding these reductions, there is a positive increase of Revenue, as we have seen, both on the year and quarter.

The National Debt.—The actual surplus of the Revenue over the expenditure for the year ending 5th January, 1836, amounts to £1,620,940 4s. 11¼d. One-fourth of the sum or £405,235 1s. 2d. will be applied by the Commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt, between 7th April and 5th July.

The New York Commercial of Thursday gives the particulars as near as could be, of a destructive fire which occurred in New York on Wednesday. "Twenty houses are destroyed, besides the Union Market House, a large brick building recently completed, on the corner of Second street and Avenue D, at a cost, we learn of $15,000.
