THOUGHTS OF HOME.

The Moon was in the Heavens, and the starry train
was there,
High raised above this sinful scene, bright, beautiful and fair;
The world was wrapped in slumber, save the braw-
ler's voice, which rose,
Like the screech-owl's o'er the ruined tower, breaking the night's repose.

I gazed upon that Island light,† that once gave joy
to me,
When, like the Star of Hope, it rose above the trembling sea,
But now it brought but troubled thoughts of voices
far away—
The circle of my boyhood's home,—the innocent—
the gay!

I mingled in the social scene, where friends were round the board,—
Where wit gave forth its flashes free, and knowledge poured its hoard:
Where heart communed with kindred heart, and
music's melting note
With mellowed cadence o'er the scene did tremulously float.

The garden where I met her first, when summer's gentle sigh,
Filled with the souls of flowers, passed redolently
by;—
The vows we at the Altar made—the home we shared and blessed,
And the smiling offspring of our love, so cherished,
so caressed.

O happy, happy moments, of falsehood and romance—
The city's deep toned midnight toll awoke me
from my trance:
All quiet lay each rock and bay, undimmed the light-house shone,—
But the loved were in another land, and I was all alone!

PROVINCIAL LITERATURE—(POETICAL.)

MR. EDITOR,—Grant me the privilege of making a few remarks which emanate from the subject I have named above, and which have reference to an excellent poetical morceau from the pen of Mr. G. B. Watson of this City, and printed in the Observer of Tuesday last.—I allude to a Paraphrase on the 137th Psalm; than which, perhaps nothing of a similar kind can be found in the whole range of verse, possessing greater power to charm and chain the senses of the understanding reader. Some of its incidental touches, apart from the events of a story of extraordinary interest, have all the freshness of bloom and beauty which the most fastidious can desire for their gratification. The sentiments are obvious and natural; and their best recommendation is, that they are expressed with unaffected simplicity, combined with lofty feeling.

I am led, Sir, thus to express myself, from the circumstance of seeing that it is the author's intention to publish a collection of Poems, allied, in character, to the one under consideration. For my own part, I, in sincerity, hope, that the patronage of a reading public may be liberally extended for the furtherance of this object; as I most unequivocally denominate a collection of Poems of this description to be far, very far above the Ephemeral works of the day, being entirely free from that light uninstructive matter which is not unfrequently presented to our notice.

To the author, I address the following stanza:—

Touch thy harp! and wake once more Strains that were so sweet of old;
Tho' their early hopes are o'er,
And their fallen shrine is cold—
Cold—save where from memory falling,
Sparkle rays of other times,
Like the voice of kindred, calling
One who faints in foreign climes.

Believe me to be, Mr. Editor,
Your very obedient servant,
PHILHARMONICUS.

DEFERRED ARTICLES.

From the Novascotian, April 10.

THE DELEGATION.—COUNCIL'S REFUSAL OF THE EXPENSES.—Of all the impudent and mad acts ever committed by any Colonial Council, in the worst period of the history of any British Province, the late refusal of the vote of £1000 to pay the necessary expenses of the Delegates appointed by the House of Assembly, to bring the state of this Colony under the notice of Her Majesty's Government, is entitled to precedence; and if any thing can heighten the indignation which it will provoke in every part of the Province, the barefaced attempt to make the people believe that the vote was lost on a point of form, will be all sufficient. If this insult to the Province is not deeply felt from one end of Nova Scotia to the other, and resented at the proper time, and in the mode which our official faction will most deeply feel, we much mistake the character of our Yeomanry, who have too much intelligence to be hoodwinked in this matter, and too much spirit to leave such a wrong unredressed.—This account will be settled on the Hustings, at the next General Election. In the meanwhile let us turn to facts.

Within the first three weeks of the recent Session, the House of Assembly, after the most ample discussion, upon various matters touching the principles upon which our commerce was to be conducted—the enormous cost of regulating our trade, and collecting our Revenue—the propriety of opening the outports, and abandoning the Post Office to Colonial accountability—the expenses of our Judicial and Civil Establishments, and the principles which should govern the appointments to the Legislative and Executive Councils, determined to send two Delegates to England. Upon many of these matters there was little difference of opinion either in the Legislature or throughout the country, some even of the members of the Council were pledged to the views taken by a majority of the lower House. Some of these topics had been annually agitated for the last ten years, and a settlement of them would save much time and remove many sources of discord. It was finally determined to call the attention of Her Majesty's Government to these subjects by Delegation. Was this only the decision of a small majority? No.—Thirty-three voted for, and but eleven against a Delegation. Of that eleven many, if not all, agree with the majority, in the necessity of carrying out some of their views—they differed only as to the propriety of doing so by Delegation. The question upon which the minority was largest, was upon the mode in which the principles laid down in Lord Glenelg's Despatches, had been applied in the construction of the Councils, but even upon this the majority embraced two thirds of the assembled Representatives of the People—and, notwithstanding every effort of argument and ingenuity on the other side, the relative numbers down to the very close of the session, exhibited in favour of the Delegation and the views it was to advocate, an amount of support, more decided and overwhelming than is almost ever found in any deliberative Assembly, on questions involving any difference of opinion.

Did the representatives of Nova Scotia, after ample time for reflection, repent of the measures they had adopted? No, so satisfied were they of their soundness, and of the necessity that existed for quieting these questions, that after providing for the defence of the country, they deliberately expressed their conviction that even the prospect of a foreign war ought not to interrupt the progress of measures so essential to our internal tranquillity. On the 18th March the Resolution applying £1000 to pay the expenses of the Delegation, was sent up to the Legislative Council, having been passed by an immense majority on the Saturday previous.—The House waited until the 2d of April, and no notice was taken of their Resolution. On the morning of that day, within a day and a half of the close of the Session, when every other Resolution for granting money had been agreed to, and the Clerks were waiting for that respecting the Delegates, in order to complete the Appropriation Act, a Conference was asked by the Council, and the House informed that the Council had authorized the Governor to select a Delegation from their Body, and asking the House to provide a sum of money to pay its expenses, or to make the £1000 named in the Resolution then before the Council, applicable to the payment of the expense of two Delegations instead of one. As the Upper Branch have no right to suggest a grant of money, nor the alteration of a Resolution granting money, the Speaker decided, the moment the report was made from the Conference, that the suggestions made by the Council were such, as could not, in point of form, be considered by the House. As far as forms go, therefore, the first attempt at violation, came from the Council—but the Country will deal with this matter upon its merits, not as a question of form, but of substance—the manner in which the act was done will be to them of little importance; the animus, the intention, the design which prompted the act, will engage their serious attention.

It was understood that the Session was to end on Thursday. Many of the members had returned to their homes supposing the business of the year done, or so nearly brought to a close that a quorum only was necessary to complete it. At this time, then, with but a thin house, and a few hours between them and the end of the Session, with the Appropriation Act lying incomplete, and their own resolution withheld, the Reformers were called on to decide whether they would risk the £1000, and peril the success of measures which had taken weeks to mature, or whether they would consent to be coerced into an expenditure they could not approve—whether they would in fact put £1000 of the People's money into the hands of the People's enemies, to be used against their interests and their wishes. The fate of the Resolution before the Council no man doubted, upon the refusal of the House to grant that Body an equal sum. If there had been no intention to defeat the House by trick or coercion, it would have been passed, and a distinct demand made for their own expenses. The ruse was too transparent to deceive any body.

As there was no time to lose, and the House had no means of judging what important matters could warrant the expense of sending a Delegation from the Council, they appointed a committee to search the Journals, and determined to meet in the evening. On the Council's Resolutions being examined, it was found that the Council's Delegation was to be sent for two very amusing objects—to counteract the views of Lord Durham, about a Confederation of the Colonies, which had never been brought before the Legislature, and never could be forced upon us without our consent—and to counteract the views of the Assembly, as to the reduction of the expences and the improvement of the machinery of our Government. The objects were praiseworthy—the demand a modest one—the menace conveyed in withholding the resolution, intelligible; and though there was but little time to deliberate, every man's mind was made up. The House met at 8 o'clock, and after expressions of indignant feeling at this last effort of an expiring faction, passed these Resolutions:—

Resolved—That this House humbly rely upon the expressed determination of Her Majesty, and of both Houses of Parliament, to adopt such measures as may be necessary to provide for the defence, and prompt the prosperity and true interests, of Her Majesty's Provinces in British North America.

Resolved—That this House entertain no fears that any system of General Confederation, or any other material alteration of the Constitution of this Province, will be sanctioned or enforced by Parliament, without the same being first submitted to the Legislature of Nova Scotia, for its approval or rejection.

Resolved—That this House can see no propriety in the Legislature expressing premature opinions upon plans which have not been and never may be proposed; nor of committing to delegated individuals the expression of their opinions upon questions that, if raised at all, can only be wisely determined after deliberate and mature consideration, by both branches of the Legislature in the Provinces they may be intended to affect, and in the midst of the population whose vital interests they may involve.

Having thus disposed of the excuse set up for sending a couple of Lawyers at the public expense to do mischief in England, the House had no alternative but to appeal by Resolution to the Executive, to ascertain whether he would take the responsibility of advancing the means necessary to carry out a measure suggested and invited by Her Majesty's Government, and deemed, by a vast majority of the People's Representatives, essential to the peace and prosperity of the Province. As the Appropriation Act had to be read three times in each House in a day and a half, a Resolution calling upon the Governor to advance £1000 was passed, with the understanding that it would not be carried up if the other was agreed to. The first came down rejected in the morning from the Council. The Governor, as was expected, from the advice he was to receive, refused to act upon the other. As his decision was well known on Thursday morning, at the suggestion of a Member of Council, another vote of credit, moved by Mr. Allison was sent up to the Council, upon an assurance that it would be passed. The House heard nothing more of it, and the Session closed, as the official clique here supposed, with the defeat of the Delegation.

Here then were the hopes of the country—the deliberate plans of the assembled Representatives of Nova Scotia, to all appearance thwarted and baffled, because they could not take £1,000 of the people's money to promote objects which their constituents believe to involve the best interests of the country. Those who but a month ago had voted £100,000 for the defence of the Colony, were denied £1000 to establish its rights, and preserve internal tranquillity. Any Governor, disposed to do his duty to his Sovereign and the people, and with a large Casual Revenue at his disposal, would not have hesitated a moment as to the course to be pursued. But all parties laid the flattering unction to their souls that if the money were withheld the Delegates would be defeated, and that no representation would be made at the Colonial Office, which a Dispatch or two would not destroy. But they will be mistaken. We shall have much to say to the country on this subject, but in the meantime it is only necessary to state, that Mr. Huntington arrived here yesterday from Yarmouth, and that BOTH THE DELEGATES GO TO ENGLAND IN THE PACKET ON MONDAY.

Many of the United States papers have fallen into the absurd error of supposing that all the prisoners who have had sentence of death passed upon them by the Court Martial here, have been executed; and express great horror at the idea. They must be aware that the only sentence known to the law for convicted traitors, is death, and it was not, therefore, competent for the Court to pronounce any other: but, in very few instances, and those of an aggravated character only, (twelve, if we recollect right,) has that sentence been carried into effect, out of the large number of persons who were found guilty. So that British rule in Canada, so far from deserving the epithet of sanguinary, which the unhanged traitors and sympathisers apply to it, has afforded an example to the world of the most magnanimous forbearance.—Montreal Courier.

A public dinner is to be given to Col. Prince, at Toronto, on the 4th inst. Sir Allan M'Nab is announced as President on the occasion.

A large public meeting had been held in the city Hall, Toronto, on the 26th, at which resolutions were adopted strongly protesting against the Union of the Provinces. The Mayor presided. The meeting adjourned till the 28th, when some resolutions were to be submitted, upon which an address to the Queen and the Imperial Parliament may be founded.

From the Kingston Herald.

The most remarkable feature that the political aspect of Upper Canada presents, is the general prevalence of a feeling of dispondency and distrust, or in many cases, of indifference to the course of events or the fate of the Province. That such a feeling can be justified either by our past history or future prospects, may well be doubted; but that it extensively prevails, we have unquestionable evidence. Even Sir George Arthur's despatch on the Finances of the Province betrays it. And we have heard of a leading man among the reformers, who, when conversing on the probability of a new election, said, "I should like to see one election in which I should take no interest. I would stay at home and not vote at all."

But more than all this is shewn by the preparations that are making for emigrating from the Province. We have heard of several persons in this neighbourhood who have determined to leave the country at any cost, and have offered their farms at much less than half value. And there are many thousands who would leave the country, if they could make arrangements for it, without incurring too great a sacrifice. When we see many thousands of the Americans yearly leaving the Eastern for the Western States, merely in hope of bettering their circumstances, we need not be surprised that a similar desire prevails in Upper Canada, in which so many other powerful causes are added to pecuniary reasons. The near and certain prospect of additional taxation in some shape or other may have its influence. In this point we think that more apprehension is felt than need be entertained. If the country were placed under good government, it would soon surmount its present difficulties.

GENERAL SCOTT.—Major General Scott has declined the compliment of a public dinner, tendered to him at New York. The following extract from his note, in reply to the invitation, shows the ground on which he declines it:—"Those sentiments are deeply impressed on my heart. But my position as a soldier, bound by peculiar ties and duties to country and government—the necessity of continuing itinerant, I know not how long—and the danger of seeming to seek, in violation of military propriety, such honors—all have recently admonished me to accept no public entertainment whatever."

BANGOR, (Maine,) April 8.—We are now daily expecting the troops under Generals Hodsdon's and Batchelder's command, who are already on their return march from the Aroostook. The troops will be paid off and receive their discharge here, which will occupy several days' time. In order to relieve the citizens as much as possible from the inconvenience of having so large a body of soldiers quartered upon them, orders have been given for the erection of extensive barracks for their accommodation, at a short distance from the business part of the city, on the top of Thomas's hill. The erections are now rapidly going up and present an imposing appearance, situated as they are on a high eminence and overlooking the whole town. Some ten or twelve days will probably elapse before the whole body of troops will be disbanded. To-day there has been a sale of the State supplies which had been ordered before the recall of the troops, and which this movement has rendered unnecessary. Thus ends for the present and probably for a long time, the solemn farce which has been playing amongst us for a month or two past, and another ample platform is established for another half century of negociation. Our citizens generally are extremely mortified at the result of the measures adopted, fully believing, as they must, that they are highly derogatory to the high character and honor of the State. After the honorable stand which has been taken by them and the unanimous feeling which had been expressed by the people in favor of sustaining it, after Congress had so nobly come to our rescue, and our sister States had so favorably and gallantly seconded our efforts, when in a word our cause was progressing so rapidly to a favorable issue, our citizens feel that they can but poorly brook the disgrace brought upon them by so dishonorable a retreat. Though they would gladly avoid the evils of an actual conflict of arms, and hail with joy the peaceful settlement of the controversy, yet having taken the firm stand which our State had taken, they cannot regard the result but with feelings of mortification and regret, the proceedings having not only effected nothing, but left the question absolutely worse than it was before. From an actual denial of all right on the part of the Provincial Government to exercise any jurisdiction over any part of the disputed territory and of the exercise of any such jurisdiction in times past, our Governor has now officially recognized such jurisdiction in them and assented to its continued and undisturbed exercise till another age of fruitless negotiation shall have been indulged in with the British Government. Surely our condition is far worse than it was before, to say nothing about the immense expense and trouble which have been incurred. On the one hand we have gained nothing, absolutely nothing, while on the other we have guaranteed to the enemy the enjoyment of rights which we have ever before denied them, and for the exercise of which, on their part, we have actually been at war against them.—Cor. Bost. Pat.
