MISCELLANEOUS EXTRACTS.

THE ARCHIMEDES.—The Archimedes arrived off Blackwall on the 2d instant, having concluded her experimental trips with various of H. M. steam-packets on the Dover station. The unprecedented novelty of a vessel so elegant in her appearance, so unencumbered with paddle-boxes, schooner rigged, and with great capacity for sailing, could not fail to excite the most lively interest amongst the nautical inhabitants of Dover; which feeling, we have no doubt, will extend far and wide when the superior advantages she possesses—which have been proved by her late trials with one of the fastest of the mail-packets, the Widgeon—are more generally known.

Her first and second trials with H. M. packets Ariel and Beaver, were attended with such favourable results, that the Lords of the Admiralty deputed Captain Chappell, R. N. and Mr. Lloyd, Engineer of Woolwich dock-yard, to superintend the experiments—to test her sea-going qualities in all their bearings, and to report officially thereon; likewise sending instructions to Captain Boteler, R. N. to appoint H. M. steam-packet to be her competitor.

On Wednesday, the 29th ult. they started together for Calais roads, and notwithstanding the Widgeon has engines of ten horse power more than the Archimedes, is nearly eighty tons less burthen, draws three and a half feet less water, and is above five feet less beam, the difference in favour of the Widgeon was only three and a half minutes going and four minutes returning; during the whole oft his trial, a dead calm prevailed, which was all in favour of the paddle wheels.

This speaks highly in favour of the superior power of the screw over that of the paddle wheel as a propeller to steam-vessels, especially when we take into consideration the great resistance the Archimedes' masts and rigging must occasion either in a calm or against a head wind. The Archimedes performed this passage from Dover to Calais roads in two hours nine minutes, and her return to Dover in two hours eleven minutes. The French mail packet Le Poste left with them from Calais, and was twenty-five minutes astern on their arrival in Dover roads.

On Friday, May 1, a fresh breeze from E. N. E. enabled the Archimedes to show her speed for the first time, with the combined powers of sail and steam, in competition with the Widgeon, which she beat nine minutes in the distance from Dover to Calais roads, and five minutes thirty seconds on her return; being only two hours one minute going, and performing her return in the short space of one hour fifty-three minutes—the shortest passage ever noted; with which she ended her experimental contests in the neighbourhood of Dover.

On the 25th ultimo the Archimedes, in a trial of one hour twenty-four minutes with H.M. steam-packet Swallow from Ostend, beat her two lengths. And it is worthy of observation, that off the Foreland, the wheel was steadied by a peace of string, and she steered herself with such truth to Dover pier, that she evidently gained head-way by it—a fact upon which many expressed their incredulity until they had the opportunity of witnessing it. Her experiments, likewise, overthrow various prejudices, and upset many erroneous opinions and reports that were afloat at Dover, and may probably exist elsewhere, viz.: that the Archimedes could not be easily stopped or backed astern; but on the 24th, P. M. she was made to go through all these objections, when a very great number of the nautical and most respectable inhabitants of the place expressed themselves highly satisfied with the result, and when she was backed said that she appeared to be going as fast astern as she could go ahead. On the 27th, the Archimedes started from Dover with the Britannia, Captain S. Bushell, for Boulogne, and arrived twenty-one minutes fifteen seconds ahead.

We cannot conclude this brief notice of such important facts without alluding to the intense interest which has been shown during these trials by those concerned in steam navigation, all of whom appear to regard with a favourable eye the successful progress of the Archimedes, and we heartily congratulate the indefatigable inventor, Mr. F. P. Smith, upon the very encouraging position which he has now attained.—Liverpool Journal.

CAPTAIN ROSS'S EXPEDITION.—Letters have been received from the Anarctic Expedition, dated at St. Helena, the beginning of February. Lieut. Lefroy, of the Royal Artillery, who is to conduct the magnetic observatory on that island, has been landed with his instruments and assistants, and occupied Napoleon Bonaparte's house at Longwood, which has been assigned as his residence, and in the neighbourhood of which his observatory is to be built. From St. Helena, Capt. Ross proceeds to the Cape of Good Hope, to establish Lieutenant Eardley Wilmot, R. N. and his party, in a similar observatory, where corresponding observations are to be made during the three years in which the expedition will remain in the southern hemisphere. We understand that, by adopting proper precautions, the officers succeeded in making magnetic observations at sea with as much precision as on land, the two ships sometimes telegraphing to each other the same minute of dip. The importance of this success towards the prosecution of the objects of the voyage will be estimated, when it is considered how our southern hemisphere is covered by the sea. Captain Ross obtained soundings in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean, far distant from any land, with a line of 2500 fathoms, being by far the greatest depth that has ever been reached by a sounding line.—London Literary Gazette.

THE SLAVE-TRADE.—Extract of a letter from a commercial house in Havana, dated March 22d, and received by the Natchez at New-Orleans:—"The British cruisers are capturing all vessels found trading on the coast of Africa, without regard to their flag or whether they are engaged in legitimate trade or not. The American brig Eliza Davidson has been condemned in one of the ports, for having on board two small blacks, which were a present to the captain from a factor. The brig was on a voyage from one of the Portuguese islands with a cargo of rice for a factory in Africa. It is asserted that the commander of an American ship of war on that station advocated and sanctioned the condemnation of the brig.
