POETRY.

THE WATCHERS ON THE SHORE.

BY MRS. TINSLEY.

[In some of the fishing villages on the coast of Norway, when the men go out with the boats, the females assemble on the beach chanting a wild song—a prayer, not for the success of the fishers, but for their safe return; and they do not quit the shore until the boats arrive.]

'Tis a weary, weary sight,
The sky and the ocean lone,
And the distance, that solemn mystery,
Veiling our loved, our own,
As we cry, upon their track—
Brother and sire come home!
Husband and lover and son come back
Over the surge and foam!
For our hearths are dark, and our souls are drear,
Till we see the light of your smiles draw near.

Hardy and gallant and true
The hearts that for us toil;
Right cheerfully every peril brave,
From the seas to take their spoil;
Well know they where we stand,
Waiting glad return,
And their guiding light is the star of love,
Whose beams around them burn;
Ah! what were the hearts or the homes they left,
Of the crowning grace of that love bereft?

Husband and lover and son,
Brother and sire come home!
The breeze has strengthen'd, the sun goes down
Over the beaten foam!
Sorrow and joy are our's,
Beyond what most may share:
Sorrow in every morn's farewell,
And joy above compare
When at eve, all doubting and danger o'er,
The gallant boats touch the strand once more.

By the shores of another sea
We shall stand ere time be past,
We shall watch the bark that may ne'er return,
Sweep over its waves at last!
Father, or brother, or son,
Husband, or lover, there—
Earth's perils over, its labour done—
May be first those depths to dare;
To pass away from the mortal beach,
Beyond regret's or affection's reach.

And we—we shall cry no more,
Brother and sire come home!
We shall look with a higher hope and trust
Over that dark sea's foam:
And our pining souls shall say—
"O, we're weary to depart!
To put all thought of the life away
For whose cares we have no heart;
To flee from darkness, and doubt, and pain,
And to be with the loved and lost again!"

GEO. SHORE, A. G. M.

GENEROSITY OF THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT.—The British Government, through Mr. Elliott, the British Pro-Consul at Boston, has awarded £500 sterling (to be distributed by him) to the owners, master and crew of the American barque "Byron," Capt. Read, of Stonington, Conn., and a Gold Medal, bearing the portrait of her Majesty the Queen, to Capt. Read, for their humane exertions in rescuing eighteen British seamen wrecked on the Coast of Patagonia. Mr. Elliott has also been directed by the British Government to give £100 sterling to the owners of schooner "Leander," of Boston, for rescuing and taking into port the crew of the British brig "Lelia."

COINCIDENCES.—We are reminded that it was about March, 1844, that the Prince de Joinville inspected our southern coast, and published his famous Report, which excited so much disagreeable feeling at the time. In that Report he remarked, as one result of his inspection, that in case of hostilities, Newhaven, in Sussex, would be the best spot at which to attempt a landing. In March 1848, his own parents succeeded in effecting a landing at Newhaven, in Sussex, but under circumstances unforeseen and unimagined alike by the Prince, his parents, and by us! Again: it was in 1834, that a French traveller, in reviewing his researches in the East, used these remarkable words. —"You see, by this rapid sketch, that the Ottoman empire is no empire at all; that the breath of life which animated it is extinct. You see that its fatal and blinded Administration has devoured the race of conquerors; and that Turkey is perishing for want of Turks." Such language, coming from the lips of a stranger, and one not much habituated to the language of Scripture, struck many in England with a natural astonishment. For a general consent of almost all Protestant interpreters (including the Assembly's Annotations and Matthew Henry's) had connected "the Euphrates" in Scripture with the Turkish empire; and here a French savant was sent to give us warning that the Euphrates was being "dried up"; immediately following which, many wonders are predicted by the inspired apostle. However, a dozen years pass away, and we find this same French traveller, Lamartine, suddenly borne up on the wave of a portentous revolution, and made the Foreign Minister of France.—Record.

Douglas Jerrold says, "Assuredly F. M. the Duke of Wellington and the Earl of Ellesmere have a dash of the 'true prophet.' The French princes have invaded England, and taken possession of some of the royal palaces."

It is a most extraordinary fact, and it will furnish a lasting page in history, that within the space of sixty years, all the monarchs of France, who reigned within that period, viz. Louis the 16th, Napoleon Buonaparte, Louis the 18th, Charles the 10th, and Louis Philippe, were dethroned. Louis the 16th was put to death by his own people in 1793; Buonaparte and Charles the 10th died in exile; Louis the 18th, after having been expelled by Buonaparte in 1815, was permitted to return to the throne, and the last of these, Louis Philippe, has found an asylum in England. If the son of Louis the 16th, styled by the Legitimists, Louis the 17th, was ever really a king, then the number of dethroned monarchs in succession would amount to six.
