St. Peter's Y. M. A. Is 25 Years Old

Large Attendance at Reorganization Meeting Last Night —Election of Officers Next Sunday.

St. Peters Y.M.A. entered into the 25th year of its existence last night when a reorganization meeting was held at which over two hundred of the members were present. Nominations for the position of officers were held and the election will take place at the first regular meeting which will be held on Sunday. Rev. Father Hogan C.SS.R. was chosen as spiritual director. The association's rooms have been newly painted and redecorated, the bowling alleys scraped and polished and everything is in readiness for the resumption of activities This will probably be after the meeting on Sunday. During the winter a series of debate, mock-trials and lectures will be conducted. A number of very prominent lecturers have promised to speak. A very active winter is being looked forward to by all the members.

IF YOU ARE WELL BRED

You realize that one of the greatest tests of good manners comes at the table and you teach a child early the proper uses of his knife, fork and spoon, and teach him to sit correctly at the table.

You do not permit him to make disparaging remarks about the food and you teach him to pass lightly over any unpleasant incidents or accidents.

Teach him to bring agreeable conversation and a friendly spirit, as well as clean hands and a well-groomed appearance to the table.

Lecture Given By Mrs. W. E. Raymond

Gave Reasons Why Natural History Society Should be Supported by General Public.

"Why" the Natural History Society should be supported by the general public was convincingly explained by Mrs. W. Edmond Raymond, in her interesting lecture yesterday afternoon, in the Natural History Assembly Hall, with Mrs. Lawrence, the new president in the chair. This is the first of the season's series, and was very promising as a beginning of the course.

Though it deals with the past and the mysteries of geology and various sciences, the very knowledge thus acquired in the museum was most invaluable at the time of the great war, when sphagnum moss was needed for the men who were suffering from the terrible wounds received in battle. Without the aid of the scientific mind of Mr. William MacIntosh, the fact that this necessity was obtainable in larger quantities in New Brunswick than in any other province in Canada, would have been undisclosed, and the lack would have meant extreme suffering and very often death to the soldiers who were doing their bit.

Another very pertinent answer to the question "Why" is found in the fact that the Museum on Union street has collections that cannot be duplicated in any other museum, both in specimens and numbers. The library that had only 120 books in 1838, has now 18,000 volumes and they are refered to by eminent men of science all over the world, particularly on the American continent. A great man from Japan has been for some time a student at the museum in other days, and scholars such as Professors J. L. Myers, Prince Bonaparte, Hogarth and Marie E. Stokes, have paid tribute to the very fine specimens and data that can be procured in our Natural History rooms and library.

Mrs. Raymond showed plainly that she felt that the response that the children made to the privilege offered was one of the strongest reasons why the institution should be encouraged by every citizen. The child naturally ascribes an antecedent to every event, and unless all do this, there would be no investigation in any of the walks of science.

It is well for the citizens of St. John to consider what is being accomplished in the museum here by taking heed to a few facts and figures, was the suggestion of the speaker. With lack of financial support the museum cannot supply the requirements of the teachers who seek help daily from the tireless curator, Mr. MacIntosh. There have been this last year, 12,000 visitors; twenty-seven classes of various kinds. Friday afternoons that have been utilized for special classes have had an attendance of 44 on the average; 202 lectures have been given and specimens loaned, 2,720, with 2,000 insects collected that have added to the already very large collection.

Touching reference was made to the memory of Mrs. J. V. Ellis, who was president of the society for a time. Mrs. Raymond said that her connection with the work was one of the beautiful pages of Natural History endeavor, which brought an applause that was full of sympathy and agreement with the speaker's expressed thought. Quickly did she refer to honored names of past officers and members, some of whom are still living, but some gone to their rest. The late Dr. G. U. Hay, Dr. Botsford, the first president of the society, and many others, among whom were the names of the late Senator Ellis and Dr. G. H. Addy.

Dr. and Mrs. George Matthew were given praise for their wonderful aid in the work of the society, the latter having been president for twenty-five years Miss Grace Leavitt was referred to as an honored member of long standing, and Mr. Leavitt as one of a few scientists who are acknowledged expert in the bird lore of the land. Tribute was given to Mrs. John A. McAvity and Mrs. W. H. Shaw for their devoted service to the society, and Mrs Lawrence was made to feel that she was welcomed gladly for the office of head officer of the ladies' association of the Natural History Society.

In closing Mrs. Raymond emphasized in a prologue, the points she had brought out with choice rhetoric and apt illustrations, that the children were to be considered in their search for knowledge and the work must go on.

Mrs. Lawrence thanked the speaker on behalf of the meeting in a few appropriate words. The electric system was not in condition to show pictures that were to have been given so the lecturer gave short word pictures with exquisite skill.

WATER CAUSED SOME DAMAGE

Breaks in Water Pipes Caused Considerable Trouble in Royal Pharmacy Last Evening.

"Little drops of water and little grains of sand, make a might ocean and a might land," as the old saying goes, but little drops of water can also do a lot of damage to the stock, furnishings and floor of a drug store when they come in contact with them. And this is what happened last evening about six o'clock in the Royal Pharmacy on King Street. A water pipe lying between the ceiling of the pharmacy and the second floor of the Royal Hotel building in which it is situated, sprang a leak. Upon noticing the water dripping, and then pouring from the ceiling, the proprietor of the pharmacy and his assistants after sending a messenger to have the water turned off, began moving the stock away from the path of the destroying water. Before the break could be repaired, three more occurred and more water found its way into the pharmacy. Eventually the breaks were repaired and no more serious damage resulted other than the hard wood floor and furnishings of the store being badly soaked and some of the stock stored in the rear of the premises damaged by the water.

The Red Cross Historical Pageant

Capacity House at Imperial Theatre Treated With Wonderful Programme Last Evening.

Bringing out with beautiful expression of face and voice the thought that the Red Cross had done such work in the war that its mission of relief to the suffering and cheer to the downcast must go on, Miss Mary White did nobly her part in the historical pageant that was shown at the Imperial last evening. Previous to the presentation of this spectacular event, Mrs. Kuhring in concise, convincing words introduced the idea that was to be shown in the pageant, emphasizing the relief work that was ever necessary in peace and war, and particularly since such discoveries had been made in regard to the deficiencies in the people of the world from wrong ideas of living.

Much credit is due Mrs. Kuhring for originating this very fine representation of the Red Cross and for the able assistance of Miss Ethel Jarvis. The stage managers were Miss Jessie Lawson, Mrs. A. C. D. Wilson and Miss Irene Barber, who had the Girl Guides in charge. Miss Estey was in charge of the Girls from the High School and did valiant service.

Everywhere among the performers were words of praise for Mr. Golding who has been so generous in loaning the Imperial and making possible the use of Pythian Castle for rehearsals. A Definite Call And The Response

The Fourth Missionary in Her Family, Dr. Ida Scudder Who Was Recently in Moncton.

The following story taken from the Maritime Baptist carries with it a message that is closely in keeping with the wonderful address that was given this week by Miss Archibald, recently returned from India. It is a tale of the need, as well as the story of a girl's response to the call of her suffering sisters in the far east. Here it is as told by Mrs. E. C. Cronk, Columbia, N. C.:

A young girl sat in Northfield, Mass. In her hand was a message. The message summoned her to come to India to see her mother, who was ill. Ida Scudder did not want to go to India. But, she would go, eagerly, gladly, to be with her mother, while she was sick, but when her mother was well, she would no longer bury herself in India. She would hasten back to America to live her life as other girls were living theirs.

So Ida Scudder took passage for India to see her sick mother—only to see her sick mother. She assured herself and her friends over and over again that there was no danger of her staying in India—the India that had already claimed more than its share of Scudders.

One night she sat in her father's house in India. A knock sounded at the door. The girl answered its summons. A man stood before her. He was a high caste Mohammedan, tall, slender, white-robed. He bowed low and spoke.

"My young wife is ill—ill to death. Our doctors can do nothing for her. Will the gracious lady come to attend her?"

"My father," she answered eagerly, "is a medical man. He will come to see your wife."

The Mohammedan drew himself up proudly:

"No man has ever looked upon the face of my wife. We are high born. I should rather a thousand times that she should die than that a man should look upon her face."

Silently he turned and went out into the darkness.

Ida Scudder sat down and thought. How long she sat, she knew not. She was startled by a second knock that sounded. Eagerly she opened the door.

"My wife," began this man, as had the other, "My wife is very sick. She may die before the mem sahib comes and heals her."

"I am not a doctor," she explained, "My father is a medical man. He will—"

The man interrupted her with a proud uplifting of his turbaned head. "I am a high caste man," he said, "No man dare look upon the face of my wife."

Eve as he spoke, he turned and disappeared into the darkness.

Ida Scudder's thoughts went back with him to the girl. Perhaps she was only a little girl. Perhaps she was dying even now because no man could help her and there was no woman to help. It was terrible that two calls should come in such rapid succession on the same night. As she shuddered at the thought and misery of it all, a third knock sounded. A third man stood before her.

"My wife," he said, "she is very ill. They told me I could find help for her here. A wonderful foreign doctor who had done remarkable things." At last there was a call for her father!

"Oh, yes; I will send my father," she answered gladly.

The man involuntarily straightened himself. "Not a man! No man shall look upon the face of my wife. You must come."

In vain did the girl plead that her father would come. Sadly and alone the man departed as had the other two before him. Ida Scudder sat down again. Were all the suffering child-wives in India calling to her?

The night passed on. The day dawned. Ida Scudder walked out into the streets. As she passed the gateway she heard wailing and lour lamentation. She knew that the life of one of the child-wives had passed with the passing of the day.

She went on. At another house the beating of the musical instruments, the shrieks, and the moans, told her that second little wife was dead.

She would have turned back, sick at heart, but a relentless hand drew her on until she stood before the rude bier bedecked with flowers, which was to carry away the poor little body of the third wife whom the skilled touch of a physician might have healed.

That fall, among the names of those who entered the Woman's Medical College in Philadelphia, there appeared the name of Ida S. Sudder. She heard the call of the women and the children of India. Above all, she heard the call which came from the lips of a Man who hung upon a Cross. As she followed the Cross into India, Dr. Ida Scudder has brought blessing and life to thousands of India's girls and women. They appeal with an insistent call for some to go, and for all to give and to pray.—Selected by Mrs. G. W. Parker.

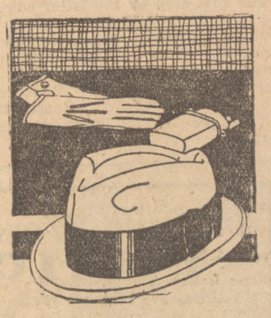
A Hat—

You'll Be Proud to Wear



Velours are the Hats of the Season as well as a hat of Service. You don't buy a Velour for just one season, you buy it for next season as well.

The Brock and the Biltmore need little of our recommendation as to their quality, they are standard Hats throughout Canada and the new shapes and colors are the last word in "pep" and style. They're here in Sand, Cedar, Pearl, Fawn and Black, all with silk linings.

The Brock at $9.50 and the Biltmore at $7.00.

If you'd rather have a felt, the Brock in the "Natural" color is probably the classiest hat we have seen. Other colors are Stone and Steel, and the price for the Brock Felt is $6.00.

The Gloves to go with that new hat are here, too, in Cape, Chamois and Suede, varying in price from $1.50 to $3.00. You can't go wrong, whether you choose the Imported or the Canadian makes. Either are the best we can get for you.
