◆ ◆ ◆

When the weather is fine, everybody is out, and when it is wet everybody goes to bed early—in the country. Lightning and thunder, with rain in torrents prevailed last evening, and the telephone became a dangerous utility to tamper with, so news of social doings are not possible of journalizing today, to any extent, besides some people are very much opposed to having small functions chronicled, because, they say, that it often causes friction between friends. They must mean acquaintances, for friendship implies some more perfect relation that could not be so easily disturbed as the suggestion would lead one to believe. As long as the world exists there will be people who fit into each other's natures in groups, and it is impossible for a hostess, who has a large circle of acquaintances, or friends to invite all, every time she entertains. It is a sign of real friendship that one shows, to be glad that the faith is secure that one can eliminate to give place to someone else. If one is sure of one's own standing, a person will never feel slighted if left out, and never elevated if included. A good recipe for this trouble, if it really exists, is the Golden Rule.

THE GREATEST WOMEN

Where shall we find our women
Worthy of greatest fame?
To whom shall we pay the honor
With high illumined name?

Among the host of claimants
To whom is honor due?
Alas! they are ever nameless,
Unknown to me and you.

They are out on the hill, in the valley,
On the mountain and in the plain;
Down in the tenement cellar—
Wherever is toil and pain.

They have followed no high ambition,
Nor dreamed of a hall of fame:
But for nameless immortal merit
They have changed a mortal name.

Forgetting glamor and glory,
They have made their beds with pain;
Their years are spent in service;
They have loved no selfish gain.

They have bartered all the battle,
In the age old, world old strife;
Where the warriors all are martyrs,
And lost to the records of life.

On earth shall they be nameless,
But on God's roll of fame
Methinks their names are written
In letters of blinding flame.

Weddings

The marriage of Miss Jessie Allison, daughter of Mr and Mrs. John Smith, of Ahuntic, to William Aiken, of Moncton, was performed at the home of the bride's parents, last Thursday afternoon at four o'clock, the Rev. J. E. Mothersill officiating. The bride was given away by her father, and wore a white organdie gown, with hat to match and a string of pearls, the gift of the groom. She carried a bouquet of roses and sweet peas. After a reception, the happy couple left for Moncton, where they will reside. Many beautiful gifts bore testimony to the regard in which both young people are held.

Kierstead-Stackhouse.

Miss Margaret Stackhouse, of Wolfville, N. S., was recently married to Ronald McNeill Kierstead, son of Prof. E. M. Kierstead, of McMaster University, Toronto. Mr. and Mrs. Kierstead will reside in Toronto.

Haines-Johnston.

Miss Marguerite Kathleen Johnston, daughter of Mr. S. Y. Johnston, of London, Ont., and niece of Mrs. Charles F. Richardson, and Mrs. John Turton, of Westmount, Montreal, was married to Armour Haines, at her home, last Wednesday afternoon, the Rev. Canon G. B. Sage, rector of St. George's church officiating. The living room, where the ceremony was performed, was decorated in white and green, the bridal group standing under an arch of greenery and gladoli. The bride was given away by her brother, Dr. Robert A. Johnston, and wore a white canton crepe gown, very simply made, with long side panels and flowing sleeves, the entire gown embroidered in a delicate tracery of pearls. Her veil was of Limerick lace and flowed in a train from the back, being caught in the form of a shirred cap, and wreathed in orange blossoms. Mr. and Mrs. Haines will reside in London, Ont.

Romance, Royalty And Riches Combined

For the Moment Marriage of Lord Mountbatten and Cynthia Ashley Has Satisfied British!

After the wedding of Princess Mary and in awaiting the wedding of the Prince of Wales, the appetite of the British public for romance has satisfied itself for the moment by absorbing every possible detail in connection with the marriage of Lord Louis Mountbatten and Edwina Cynthia Ashley, says the London correspondent of the New York Tribune. Here, indeed, are all the requisite ingredients—romance, royalty and riches all combined. A popular young member of one of the collateral branches of the royal family weds perhaps the richest heiress in all England, granddaughter of the late Sir Ernest Cassel, who bequeathed to her the bulk of his vast fortune; and the King and Queen, surrounded by nearly all the members of the royal family, attend the ceremony to see the Prince of Wales create a precedent by acting as best man to his cousin and brother officer—the first time that the heir apparent to the crown of England has ever appeared in such a capacity.

Kin of Royalty.

Lord Louis Mountbatten, though he bears only the courtesy of the son of a peer, is closely related to the royal family, of which, until a few years back, he ranked officially as a member. With the other members of his collateral branch, he assumed the surname of Mountbatten in 1917, at the same time as the King assumed for himself and his immediate family the style and title of the "House of Windsor." It was then decided that only the direct descendants of the King should bear the title of prince, and the heads of the collateral branches, discarding their own titles, mostly of foreign extraction, became British peers. The branch of the Battenbergs to which Lord Louis belongs—the new surname of Mountbatten is a direct translation of the German—has a distinguished, and in some ways tragic, history. It descends from Princess Alice, third child of Queen Victoria, who married Prince Louis (afterward reigning grand duke) of Hesse, a German principality. Their daughter, Victoria, married Prince Louis of Battenberg, who made his home in England, and became a British subject.

Mobilized the Fleet.

Prince Louis entered the royal navy, in which he had a distinguished career, and the outbreak of war in 1914 found him First Sea Lord of the Admiralty. It was he, in fact, who, in association with Winston Churchill, the Cabinet head of the Admiralty as First Lord, was responsible for the prompt mobiliation of the Grand Fleet, which had such a decisive effect on the course of the war. Due to his German origin, however, an agitation was worked up against him, and, in spite of the loyal support which he received from the Government, Prince oLuis resigned his post. In 1917 he was created Marquess of Milford Haven. He died less than a year ago, suddenly and in somewhat reduced circumstances. His second son, Lord Louis Mountbatten, whose marriage fell just short of his twenty-second birthday, followed the sea like his father and like his elder brother, the present Marquess of Milford Haven.

The Prince's Chum.

He has two years' naval service during the war as a midshipman to his credit. A close companion of the Prince of Wales, though a few years his cousin's junior, he accompanied the Prince on his Australasian tour. Last year he was appointed the Prince's naval aide for the Far Eastern tour, just concluded, and shared with him all the labors and pleasures of that memorable trip. It was during the closing stages of the tour that Lord Louis's engagement to Miss Ashley was announced, an engagement which, though he is not now strictly a member of the royal family, still required the King's assent, and at the same time it was announced that he had asked the Prince of Wales to act as his best man. Overriding tradition, the Prince agreed, and his attendance as best man was his first public appearance since his return to England. The bride, Edwina Cynthia Ashley, though a simple commoner, has a family association with the royal family. Her grandfather, Sir Ernest Cassel, the famous banker, was a close personal friend of King Edward. When Sir Edward's daughter, who married Colonel Wilfred Ashley, gave birth to a daughter, King Edward stood godfather to the child. The bride, who was given away by her father, Colonel Ashley, was born in 1901, and is therefore a year younger than her husband.

Fourteen Hundred Invitations.

St. Margaret's, Westminster, an old church dwarfed by the close proximity of the Abbey—which at the moment presents a somewhat mottled appearance, due to the trying-out on some of its ancient walls of a preservative that several London newspapers accuse of looking like whitewash—is famous for its fashionable weddings. Fourteen hundred invitations were issued, and the church could barely accommodate the large number of guests, coming from all parts of the world, eager to attend a ceremony graced by the presence of the King and Queen and the other members of the royal family, including Queen Alexandra, the ever-popular Queen Mother, who never fails to attend the weddings of the younger members of the royal family. Included among the guests were several native Indian rulers, notably the Aga Khan, the Maharaja of Bikanir, who commanded a camel corps in the East during the war; the Maharajah of Kapurthala and the Jam Sahib of Nawanagar, better known as "Ranji," most famous of cricketers.

Encouraged In The Red Cross Movement

Mrs. G. H. Kuhring is smilingly happy these days, so encouraged is she in the recognition that the press and the people are taking of the enterprise that has brought her here again, to take up the threads of the partly woven fabric of the Red Cross movement, which was laid aside in the loom on her departure last year, awaiting her skilful fingers to complete the full weave of the design. Nothing so full of import to the community has been brought up for consideration, that is the duty for everyone to act upon as this, unless, as was stated before the great war, which, as time goes on does not appear in the same class with this humane plan to save life, by a prevention, and definite eradication of the cause, rather than the effect.

A case of scarlet fever in the city means contamination to the country, and vice versa. How much more is this true in the case ofthe other terrible scourges that are menacing on every hand! Again the country is the clearing house for the city population, do what one will to influence people back to the land, so the need of strong, healthy emigration from the rural districts, is very necessary for the well-being of the future of Canada. To one and all comes a clarion call. May they hear and quickly obey.

FROM BUENOS AIRES TO HIS OLD HOME

Captain T. I. Murchison and Family Are En Route to Prince Edward Island on Visit.

The steamer Empress from Digby arrived last evening at seven o'clock with a very heavy passenger list, most of whom were tourists. Among those on board were Captain T. I. Murchison, his wife and his son, formerly of P. E. I., and now of Buenos Ayres. The party were met at the dock by Captain Murchison's old friend and shipmate of former years, Captain A. J. Mulcahy, of West St. John.

The Murchisons stayed at the Dufferin Hotel last night and are leaving today for Prince Edward Island. Captain Murchison started a loading and unloading business in Buenos Ayres a good many years ago and was very successful. He is taking a well earned vacation back to the land of his birth.

MARJORIE RAMBEAU TELLS HOW TO IMPROVE FACIAL LINES

Marjorie Rambeau

By MARJORIE RAMBEAU
Actress in "The Gold Fish," Famed for Beauty of Facial Contour.

Plastic surgery is becoming so common that in time every woman may become the architect of her own face and have any sort of a profile she can pay for.

But the average woman would never be obliged to have recourse to the knife if she would remember the contour of her face is a reflection of her thoughts and character.

A psychologist once told me it is possible entirely to change the expression and shape of one's mouth in two weeks by changing the current of thoughts.

◆ ◆ ◆

If you have overdeveloped your critical faculty and are continually pouting you will destroy the beauty of your lips.

Small lines indicate you have allowed small worries to absorb your attention. Sagging downward lines show you haven't looked on the happy side of things.

A double chin reveals you have not held your head proudly erect, but have allowed it to slump.

The greatest beautifier known is relaxation. Ten minutes of relaxation a day will do more to prevent wrinkles than any other measure.

The benefits of massage are differently rated by different schools of beauty. Undoubtedly heavy facial massage is not desirable, but the simple massage every woman may give herself nightly after cleansing her face does much to keep the musices firm and the face unlined.

Always use a pure cream and use the first three fingers of each hand. Rub upward and outward, using a firm, gentle touch and a rotary motion. Massage the cheeks, temples, throat and forehead, particularly the region between the eyes where wrinkles are prone to assemble.

When massaging about the eyes be gentle as the tissues are delicate.

To retain the firm contour of the throat massage the muscles in a slanting direction from under the chin toward the shoulders and from the middle of the throat upward toward the ears.

Correct breathing exercises, swimming and exercises which give play to the muscles of the neck will do much to develop it symmetrically.

Daily Fashion Hint

DISTINCTIVE AND DURABLE

The tailleur has a definite place among the fashions for all seasons, and for mid-summer one sees this advance model in sports silk. The single-breasted jacket is amply supplied with pockets and falls well to the hips. The skirt is a straight gathered model with straight belt. Medium size requires 5 yards 40-inch sports silk.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Mops

If the oiled mop is thoroughly shaken after each time it is used, it will keep clean for several months before a bath in hot suds is required.

The Healthful Prune

When stewing your next batch of prunes, slice a lemon and add it to the prunes when they are almost done. It is a decided improvement.

Broken Glass

The safest way to gather up broken glass is to wipe it up with a wet woolen rag, which should then be wrapped in paper and thrown away.

Easy Cleaning

Make a bag of several thicknesses of soft muslin and fill with puverized pumicestone. Stitch across upper edge to keep the powder from spilling. Window panes wiped with this pad will be shiny and clean immediately.

A Use for Borax

When doing up your fine white underthings, place a little borax in the water, which will not only tend to whiten them, but will add that bit of stiffness that is so delightful and fresh. It is easier than starch and will not stiffen nearly so much.

A CHARMING STREET COSTUME

A crepe silk of novelty weave in pale beige color makes a very cool and comfortable costume for street wear in town on a midsummer day. The plaited silk skirt and loosely hanging jacket weigh scarcely a pound and under the light silk jacket is a sleeveless guimpe of organdie and lace frilling. The gay Roman striped scarf is of thin silk and does not add to the weight or warmth of the costume, though it gives a vivid and becoming dash of color, repeated in the shirred silk hat.

The individual woman who studies her type, knows what is becoming to her and works for this result, instead of trying to evolve something that is out of the ordinary, will be the well dressed woman. Good taste demands that our clothes attract attention, because they are so becoming, not because they are so different.

CORN FRITTERS

BY BERTHA E. SHAPELEIGH,
Cooking Authority for NEA Service and Columbia University.

2 cups corn.
1 teaspoon salt.
⅛ teaspoon pepper.
½ cup flour,
1 teaspoon baking powder.
2 eggs, yolks and whites beaten separately.

Mix corn, seasonings, flour, baking powder and yolks together. Beat well. Add whites of eggs, beaten until stiff, mixing the whites in very lightly.

Have ready, in a frying pan, oil or lard to a depth of two or three inches, heated until it will brown nicely a piece of bread in one minute.

Drop the corn mixture from a tablespoon and cook 10 minutes, turning the fritters once. Drain and serve. This amount will make 10 large fritters.

Corn fritters are excellent to serve with fried or baked chicken, or for a supper dish with a cream sauce or as a dessert with maple syrup.

Cut this out and paste it in your cook book.

IF YOU ARE WELL BRED

You, as hostess, welcome with a smile the dinner guest who is late and arrives after the company is seated, and receive his apologies, but you do not rise unless the guest is a woman.

The host goes forward, however, assists the late comer to his seat and makes general conversation so that the attention is distracted from the incident.

MARRIAGE A LA MODE

In our country we delegate most of the duties connected with a wedding to the brides' family, but in Peru they have nothing to do with the event except to act as guests.

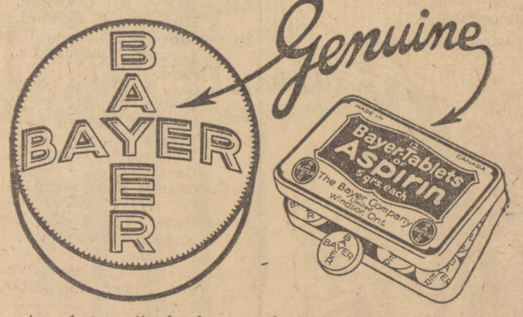

The marriage is conducted at the home of the bridegroom and his father provides the feast and the habiliments. Usually the ceremony lasts for three days.
