HANDLE POTATOES BETTER

the hauling of many pounds of barrels in every load. This proved popular with his men, although more time was required, instead of having to carry barrels one at a time along the rows the men took an armful of sacks, distributing them at the proper intervals, thus saving many trips.

The tubers were then gathered in baskets as usual, the mouth of the sack pulled over the basket, and the potatoes poured in without any drop. Great care was exercised in racking. Instead of allowing the stock to fall into a barrel or bags, shallow baskets about a foot deep, padded with mats, were placed under the rack, again eliminating a dangerous drop. The amount of bruising in racking was practically nil. The potatoes were taken into the cars in sacks instead of barrels. A check up at the receiving points demonstrated that all shipments arrived in excellent condition.

It was found that more time was occupied in handling the stock, but that enough extra potatoes were put on the market through absence of injury to pay for the entire cost of digging.

It is felt by many of the shippers that if similar methods could be followed in the handling of all New Brunswick potatoes that this province would find that its product would occupy the leading place in the markets of the continent.

Some New Brunswick dealers, resenting the insinuation that we handle our potatoes like coal, have already adopted bags altogether, and it is hoped the practise will eventually become general.

The jail at Houlton contains about 90 prisoners now, although it has accommodations for only about 35, for which it was built away back 41 years ago. Why can not and should not Aroostook county take care of its prisoners in a reasonable, healthful and humane way? we are not asking for anything fancy or unreasonably expensive or particularly superfluous for our prisoners, only that they be given a fair amount of room, decent lodging, fresh air and something fairly wholesome to eat. With the lack of accommodations now at the Houlton jail they can not get as good service there as any prisoners anywhere deserve. Will not our county commissioners do something toward providing more space for these prisoners at as early a date as possible? Will they not do something to keep the young, comparatively harmless and impressionable boys in the institution from becoming the victims of hardened old criminals, by constant association with them, thus losing all respect for themselves and all their regard for the laws of God and man?—Review, Fort Fairfield, Maine.
