Master Mind Behind Great Britain's Anti-Spy System

Not even Cabinet Ministers and high Admiralty officials knew anything of the work of 40 O.B.

Yet within its four walls was made perhaps the greatest "scoop" of the War—the communication from Herr Zimmerman, German Foreign Secretary, to Count Bernstorff, German Ambassador in Washington, that announced Germany's intention to start an unrestricted submarine campaign. This message, it was claimed, was directly responsible for bringing the United States into the War.

The sea was not the only concern of those in "40 O.B.," who warned the French of the forthcoming great attack on Verdun.

And, as the war went on, spy after spy throughout the length and breadth of Great Britain, was kept under constant surveillance until the hour had struck for him to be gathered into the net.

SPLIT

A guard taking over a local train noticed a large piece of fluff in his whistle, and on his shaking it the pea fell out and was lost.

There were only a few minutes to go, so he hurriedly called a porter and sent him out to buy a bag of peas.

On the return of the porter, the guard realized with disgust that the shop had given him split peas; there was no time to change them, so, quickly inserting one into his whistle, he stood back, waved his flag, blew hard—and only half the train moved out!

M-M-M!

Charles M. Schwab says the longer the depression lasts, the greater will be the following prosperity. That's like sitting on a hot stove—the longer you sit the better it feels when you get up.

AMAZES SCIENTISTS

Some of the boy's methods are quite ingenious, the professors at the Institute have found. For instance, when asked to multiply 20 by 24 mentally, he gave the answer—600—in a few seconds.—Pittsburgh paper.
