

CHURCH FLOORING GAVE WAY; MANY INJURED.

Crowd Had Assembled in Vestibule to Attend the Annual Turkey Supper — More Than Sixty Persons Precipitated Into the Cellar, a Distance of Ten Feet — Panic Narrowly Avoided — Injured Taken to Hospital.

BOYLSTON, Mass., Jan. 18. — The flooring of the vestibule of the Congregational church in Boylston Centre collapsed tonight under the weight of a crowd of people who were there to attend a turkey supper, and between sixty and seventy persons were precipitated into the cellar, a distance of ten feet. One man was seriously injured, several others were so badly hurt that they required the attention of physicians, while nearly all suffered from shock and bruises.

Henry L. Hopkins, of 189 Lincoln street, Worcester, superintendent of street lighting in that city, was most seriously injured internally. An ambulance conveyed him to the hospital in Worcester. Among the others injured were:

Ralph Hazleton, Worcester; leg fractured.

Charles E. Smith, Clinton; internal injuries feared.

Horace H. Lowe, chairman of the board of road commissioners of the town; had bruises and leg severely wrenched.

Mrs. Calvin H. Hastings, Clinton; bruises and muscular strains.

Louise Smith, Worcester; legs injured.

The turkey supper at the Boylston Centre Congregational church is an annual affair which has come to be a social occasion of much note not only in this town, but in Worcester and other nearby places. Excursion parties to attend it are made up annually in the various towns, travelling by electric cars and barges.

Just before the accident happened at about 7.30 tonight, two trolley cars filled with people from Worcester, Sterling, Berlin, West Boylston, Shrewsbury and other places, had arrived at the church. The people who had come earlier had finished eating, and the tables were being cleared to be made ready for the new-comers. People who had dined went into the vestibule of the building intending to wait there for the beginning of the entertainment later in the church auditorium, and they were met by the throng of new arrivals from the trolley cars. In the crush in the little vestibule, the flooring sagged and some of the timbers gave way completely and a hole was opened up under the feet of the throng. Through the opening three score or more persons dropped into the cellar, a distance of ten feet. There was a wild scramble to escape, but the crowd prevented a panic, and the women and children were first assisted from the mass. A lamp fell with the flooring and broke, but the fire was extinguished before it had caused any damage.

One of the first persons from outside the church to reach the scene was G. H. Hastings, who lives in the town. He furnished valuable assistance to the unfortunate people and also secured medical attendance promptly by telephone to Dr. W. H. Bliss of Shrewsbury. Dr. Bliss and another Shrewsbury physician were soon at the church, the floor about the vestibule was the direction of the physicians the more severely wounded were removed to their homes and to the Worcester hospital, while others who were found to be only slightly hurt, were allowed to go home unassisted.

Horace H. Lowe of Clinton, who was one of the injured ones, said that he was in the centre of the crowd in the vestibule when the floor collapsed, and he felt himself dropping into the cellar and the next instant he was buried under a mass of people who slid upon him from the funnel shaped sag which the floor made. The aperture assumed the shape of a funnel, and Mr. Lowe was taken to his home in Clinton after the accident.

END OF EDWARDS
CASE NOT YET.

Widow and Others Are Reluctant to Accept Suicide Finding

NEW YORK, Jan. 18. — Charles Hillier, at whose home his brother-in-law, Chas. A. Edwards, of New York, met his death three weeks ago, stated today that he desired to see all the evidence upon which Conner Mix based his finding of suicide.

Some of Mr. Hillier's friends are quoted as saying that he is reluctant to accept the suicide finding, and that Mrs. Edwards, the widow, is opposed to it. It is stated that she wants to continue the investigation into the death of her husband.

In the report of the medical examiner which is on file, supplemental to the coroner's report and evidence there is this opinion:

"The location and direction of the bullet wound were such that it might have been self-inflicted, though it was in a very unusual place for this."

Seventh Day Adventists Protest Against Sunday Law of Lord's Day Alliance.

(Special to the Sun.)

OTTAWA, Jan. 18. — A deputation of Seventh Day Adventists, including V. H. Thurston, president of the Canadian Union conference; H. E. Rickland, president of the Quebec conference; A. O. Burrill, president of the Ontario conference; and Eugene Leland, secretary of the Religious Liberty Association of Canada, waited upon the prime minister and the minister of justice today to protest against the Sunday law proposed by the Lord's Day Alliance. They observe Saturday and protest against being obliged to keep Sunday also.

KIEFF, Russia, Jan. 18. — The local revolutionists by a daring exploit have obtained a large quantity of war munitions from the arsenal at Kieff. A number of men in military uniforms appeared at the arsenal with forged requisitions, loaded two wagons with munitions and escaped.

The idea flashed through the sergeant's mind that the men gazing at him so intently were the gentlemen he had been instructed to capture, but he did not too precipitate. Returning to the corner of the building and then with a colossal stride was upon them, clutching them by the backs of the necks, one in each hand.

Summoning to his aid Officer Wm. H. White, who was near the sergeant, transferred one of the men, Dalley, to his charge and took care of the mulatto himself. The negro struggled fiercely, but he was eventually handcuffed with his hands in front of him. To do this the sergeant had to throw the man down and jump on him first.

The procession then started up King street. While passing the Western Union office the prisoner flung himself from the corner of the building and tried to escape, but it was no use. A few steps further up the sergeant heard something strike the pavement with a thud. Looking around he saw that the negro had managed to unfasten the belt which contained his revolver. A boy picked up the weapon and handed it to the sergeant. The negro with a grumble snarled out with a viciousness that gave evidence of his desperate character: "You'd better not let me see you for that."

The negro also expressed his contempt for his companion, who he said might easily get away, as he was not handcuffed. He also made a sporting proposition to the sergeant that if he would release him he would risk his chances of being shot.

"I would rather be shot than go back anyway," he said.

Supposed Red Beach Burglars
Captured by St. John Police.
Clever Work of Sergt. Baxter
Who Found His Men a Few Hours After Description
Arrived—Prisoners Were Heavily Armed.

Two men, one a mulatto, the other white, supposed to be the desperadoes who after a series of burglaries at Red Beach Me., on Tuesday morning, shot and dangerously wounded James Brown, the Red Beach Plaster Co.'s night watchman, were captured in this city yesterday afternoon by Sergeant Baxter and Officer Wm. H. White. Both men were armed to the teeth, and the mulatto put up a vicious fight for liberty. His efforts against the police and nerve of Sergt. Baxter, however, proved unavailing, and both men were taken into custody.

Had the doughty sergeant been alone though, it is possible there might have been trouble of a serious kind, as the men are undoubtedly desperate characters, and probably would not have hesitated to shoot had they been given an opportunity.

The story of the crime with which these men are charged, was told in Tuesday morning's Sun, and is given in greater detail elsewhere in this issue.

The arrest, which reflects great credit on Chief Clark and his alert officers, was made in consequence of a telegram which the chief received between two and three o'clock yesterday afternoon from the Hon. J. P. Marshall, deputy marshal of Calais, Me., in the message the chief was asked to be on the look out for a white man and a colored companion, who were wanted in connection with the Red Beach burglaries and for shooting James Brown.

A brief description was given of the men and it was stated that both men would be armed, and one of them, the mulatto, would probably be wearing a revolver.

The chief detailed Deputy Jenkins, Detective Killen and Sergt. Baxter on the case, and before five o'clock both men were landed behind the bars.

The luck was with Sergt. Baxter, the giant of the force, who first saw the oddly assorted pair at the head of the North Wharf, a few feet in front of him. His attention was attracted to them because of their persistent staring at him.

The idea flashed through the sergeant's mind that the men gazing at him so intently were the gentlemen he had been instructed to capture, but he did not too precipitate. Returning to the corner of the building and then with a colossal stride was upon them, clutching them by the backs of the necks, one in each hand.

Summoning to his aid Officer Wm. H. White, who was near the sergeant, transferred one of the men, Dalley, to his charge and took care of the mulatto himself. The negro struggled fiercely, but he was eventually handcuffed with his hands in front of him. To do this the sergeant had to throw the man down and jump on him first.

A boy picked up the weapon and handed it to the sergeant. The negro with a grumble snarled out with a viciousness that gave evidence of his desperate character: "You'd better not let me see you for that."

The negro also expressed his contempt for his companion, who he said might easily get away, as he was not handcuffed. He also made a sporting proposition to the sergeant that if he would release him he would risk his chances of being shot.

"I would rather be shot than go back anyway," he said.

He had $100 in his pockets, and was set upon by a number of men and would have been robbed, but he was murdered had the negro not come to his assistance and rescued him.

The mulatto refused to give his name or place of residence, and when asked if he had a wife "guessed he was single," giving his occupation as that of a laborer. He is about twenty-eight years of age and five feet eight and a quarter inches in height and smooth shaven. He is tattooed on the left forearm and is minus two fingers on his left hand.

"Dalley" weighs about one hundred and seventy-five pounds, is five feet six, and a quarter inches tall, and wears his hair parted in the centre and plastered down over his forehead. He also is artistically tattooed with various striking designs, including representations of daggers and horseshoes.

Both men wore short dark coats, blue sweaters and caps, apparently disdaining the conventional overcoat. The men were well fortified for trouble, each having in his possession a 32 caliber revolver, with the six chambers loaded, and were well supplied with cartridges. Among the white man's possessions were found a tag bearing the name of P. T. Marshall, a novel, the title of which was "San Siro, the Young Engineer," and twenty-one keys.

The mulatto carried a larger cargo. In addition to the revolver he had an ugly looking dirk and a razor, with a whetstone to keep its edge keen. A diary found among his effects, bore the name "John Ashton." Two letters addressed to Mrs. Annie McClure, and signed "Jack," a compass, a lock pick, a whistle to keep its edge keen. The negro's taste for literature was even more lurid than that of his companion, as he had a copy of the Daily Telegraph with him. The only money found was a novel, the title of which was "San Siro, the Young Engineer," and twenty-one keys.

Chief Clark wired the authorities at Calais, and the men were captured, and received a copy of the telegram from the police station, where they looked the prisoners over, stating afterwards that they were the men they had been looking for.

The negro they identified as John Ashton. As far as they know he has no previous criminal record, although they say he answers to the description of a man wanted in Boston for porch climbing.

The white man's name is Wm. Phelps. He was born in Calais, the officers say, and has been around for more or less years. This is the first offense of the kind that he has been charged with as far as the officers know.

Officer McNamee of the local police force recognized Phelps as a former mess boy on the steamer State of Maine, with whom he sailed nine years ago. Later he was a deck hand on the St. Croix for a short time.

The officers from Maine, although reluctant to give away their hand, say they have no doubt that the two men in jail here are the parties who committed the Red Beach burglaries and shot Watchman Brown. They were seen leaving the place where the boat elsewhere referred to was left after the robberies were committed, and in which part of the stolen goods were found.

The officers have been on the trail of the men since Tuesday, tracing them to St. Stephen, where they found that some of the stolen goods had been pawned, and from there to St. John. They say that the men were very careful of their money, and that if Mr. Brown, the man who was shot, will recover.

Brown was unable to identify either of the men, but suspected a man named Marshall, who bears a bad reputation, and an Italian. This idea was, however, abandoned just as soon as the other two men were connected with the theft of the boat.

The officers from Maine will have an interview with Chief Clark this morning and will probably take the men to Calais this evening, where as things now look, they will have to face a charge of murder.

CAIAIS, Me., Jan. 17. — The quietude of Red Beach, which is officially known as Ward 7, of this city, was rudely disturbed at an early hour Tuesday morning by an occurrence which it is feared may have a tragic ending and, when the residents were aroused from their slumbers it was to find that a murderous assault, following the burglary of several places of business, had been made upon James Brown, night watchman for the Red Beach Plaster Co. A young girl named Minnie, who was hurrying to the Forest telephone pay station to summon medical aid for her mother, was the first to raise the alarm, and in a very brief space of time the whole village was aroused.

Miss Mingo, who lives near the Plaster Co.'s store, had occasion to pass the store on her way to the telephone office and found the watchman, Mr. Brown, lying upon the platform in front of the building. When she had imparted this information to others living nearby the parties immediately hurried to the watchman's assistance and were horrified to find him unconscious and lying in a pool of his own blood. The Plaster Co.'s officials were at once notified, and a physician, Dr. Russell, summoned to the assistance, the latter assuming charge of the case as Dr. Russell had another patient whose condition required his immediate presence.

Dr. Russell found Mr. Brown suffering from a bullet wound, the missile having entered the back between the shoulders, penetrating the lungs. The victim was in a precarious condition, and where he surprised two men in the act of forcing open the safe, the hinges of which had been knocked off by means of a heavy hammer.

His sudden appearance startled the burglars, who when run out of the building towards Mr. Brown, struck him over the head with his lantern. The fellow started and ran, with Mr. Brown in pursuit, when his pale, gleaming suddenly appeared and began firing his revolver at the courageous watchman. Five shots were fired, but only one took effect.

Realizing that he was up against desperate characters Mr. Brown started for the door, but the two men, using his own weapon, when one of the bullets caught him between the shoulders, but he kept bravely on, reached the door and secured his weapon, but when he got outside the building his strength gave way and he fell unconscious upon the ground with blood spurting from his wound and mouth. There he was found by Miss Mingo.

Before witnesses Mr. Brown informed President Newton of the Plaster Co. that one of his assistants was "upset" Marshall, a resident of Red Beach for ten or more years, and from his description of the second burglar suspicion fell upon a young Italian named Joe Cook, who has been hanging about the town for the past six weeks, doing odd jobs for anyone willing to employ him.

While the excitement over the shooting of Mr. Brown was at its height the burglar, who had been busy in other places before attempting the robbery of the post office. First the blacksmith shop of Robert Pottle had been visited, where a large and bit and a small sled were appropriated, also a copy of the left by Mr. Pottle in his desk. He proceeded to the store of Thomas & Bonney, entrance being easily gained by means of the tools secured at Pottle's, and helped themselves to a number of pipes, several pocket knives and two revolvers, and a supply of cartridges the burglars looted the till, containing about $10, and proceeded to the post office, where they were working with the tools secured at Pottle's, and helped
